ACCIDENT OF THE CRITICAL KIND.—BOY KILLED.—About eight o'clock, on Monday morning, a boy, named Peter Salve, aged eleven years, was instantly killed at Brinton's station, on the Pennsylvania Railroad, by being run over by a freight train.

Nicholas Salve, the father of the boy, took passage with his son on the Blairsville Accommodation train at Manor station, in Westmoreland county, designing to get off at Brinton's. On reaching the latter place, the old man jumped off the car, and was closely followed by his son. Instead of crossing to the right, as they should have done, they stepped to the left, across the main track. A freight train, going east, was within a few feet of the old man, when he tripped and fell, lying partly upon the track. A gentleman, named Swan, who saw the danger, seized the old man and drew him off. The boy followed close upon the heels of his father, but was struck by the cow catcher of the locomotive and knocked under the train. His head was severed from the body, and lay about six feet distant, after the train had passed. The body was horribly mutilated, and presented a shocking spectacle.

When the news of the accident reached the city, Coroner Alexander summoned a jury of inquest, and proceeded to the ground. John H. Hampton, Assistant-Solicitor, appeared on behalf of the Pennsylvania Company.

The following testimony was elicited in the case:

James Kenlon, sworn—Came down on the Blairsville Accommodation train from Westmoreland county; got upon the platform at Brinton's station; saw a boy crossing the track; also saw a locomotive approaching; not more than six feet, I should judge, from where the boy jumped off, the cow catcher struck him, and he fell with his head across the rail; his head flew off and rolled a distance of five or six feet; an old man was with the boy; he tried to cross but fell, and I would have been killed had he not been dragged from the track; the Accommodation train was going west; and the Freight train east.

Mason A. Shattock, sworn—Am an engineer on the Pennsylvania Railroad; had charge of the engine attached to the freight train which ran over the deceased; came up at precisely ten minutes after eight; this is the schedule time for passing; looked at my watch just as I approached; did not see the boy at all; saw the old man pulled off the track; whistled at the hill, a short distance from the station; a long whistle, and twenty or thirty short ones; were down; the fireman was pulling the bell at the time.

Jeremiah Gumbert, Sworn—Was conductor on the freight train; was running on time; heard the whistling and ringing of the bell; saw the man jump, and the boy follow right after; halloed to the engineer, but he was too close to stop; the Accommodation had not stopped when the parties jumped off.

Nicholas Salve, the father of the boy, was requested to make a statement, which he did, through an interpreter, not being able to speak English. He merely stated that he got on at Manor station, intending to stop at Brinton's, and that when he stepped from the car, the train had fully stopped.

Wm. M. Wills, sworn—Am engineer of the Blairsville Accommodation train; when we arrived at Brinton, I saw the freight train approaching very slowly; saw the old man and boy jump off; did not see them struck, as the other engine had them from view; I was on schedule time; heard the whistle and bell of the freight train; the passengers should have got out on the other side of the track; thought them very reckless in attempting to cross when the locomotive was so near them.

Robert Sproul, sworn—Was on the platform when the Accommodation arrived at Brinton's; the old man jumped off, tripped, and fell forward; I saw the Freight train approach, and pulled the old man off just one moment before the engine passed; saw a second person close behind him; he was past the centre of the cow-catcher when it struck him.

Wm. Steinburg, sworn—Am a brakesman; was on the freight train; was going about three or four miles an hour; heard the whistle and bell, and had the brakes down very tight.

The evidence fully satisfied the jury, and a verdict of accidental death was rendered.

A resolution was also passed by the jury, declaring that the deceased came to his death through carelessness and negligence, and that no blame could be attached to the officers of the company.

Although the company is entirely exempt from all blame, we understand that, inasmuch as Mr. Salve is a poor man, a handsome sum of money will be tendered him.

LARCENY.—Yesterday, a man named John Wallace was arrested and committed to jail by Alderman Parkinson, charged on oath of Catharine Braunberger with the larceny of a pocket-book containing some two or three dollars. Catharine left the house to get a mug of milk, from a neighbor, and during her absence Wallace entered the pocket-book from a table, and made off. The woman raised the whole neighborhood, and the thief was pursued to the bank of the Allegheny river, when he was arrested. He was seen throwing the pocket-book into the river, but after a short search the treasure was found. Wallace hotched the job completely, and the awardees brought him to the LAMPLIGHT. He should either practice stealing to better advantage, or follow some honest employment.

A GOOD BUGGESTION.—The Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad will be opened through to Chicago in November next. It is proposed that the Councils of Pittsburgh and Allegheny unite in extending an invitation to the authorities, business men and editorial corps of the cities of Chicago, Dubuque, Milwaukie, Rock Island, Davenport, Peoria and other points in the West, to visit the sister cities on the occasion of the opening of the road.

Let us have a celebration by all means.

DISASTROUS DEBUT.—On Thursday the 18th the Board of Directors for building a bridge across the Monongahela river, met at the old Swan House, and awarded the contract to Messrs. Brown, Henry and Kinrader of Kittanning. Two of the piers will be commenced during the present season. The structure will resemble that at Kittanning. The bridge is to be completed for the sum of $80,000.

ASSAULT UPON A BOY.—Justice McKee, of Birmingham, yesterday committed to jail a man named Jacob Rohel, charged on oath of his son Jacob, with assault, with intent to kill. The old man had been drinking for several days, and chased the boy with an ax. He will most likely be discharged after he becomes sober, as the boy has no desire to prosecute his father.

A meeting of the friends of Fremont will be held in the Third Ward, Allegheny, at the pole, on Sunday, next, and North Common, on Tuesday evening, 23d inst., at 7½ o'clock P. M. Messrs. Shields, Kirpatrick and Collier will address the meeting. The Central Club will be in attendance with some of their best songs.

SELLING LIQUOR WITHOUT A LICENSE.—A man named P. M'Tier, made information before Alderman Parkinson, yesterday, charging John Pearson with selling liquor without license. A warrant was issued.
