ADDISON ON THE TELEGRAPH.—In the 241st number of the Spectator is a playful suggestion by Addison, in regard to absent lovers, which, although written early in the eighteenth century, has found its realization in the middle of the nineteenth. After quoting a letter from Absteria, complaining of the secret she felt at the absence of her husband, and suggesting various remedies for her relief, among which was one of having an hour set apart for mutual remembrances in prayer, he adds the following:

"Sophronia, in one of his Profusions gives an account of a chimerical correspondence between two friends, by the help of a certain loadstone, which had such a virtue in it that if it touched two several needles, when one of the needles so touched began to move, the other, though it never so great a distance, moved at the same time and in the same manner. He tells us that two friends, being each of them possessed of one of the needles, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate. They then fixed one of the needles on each of these in such a manner that they could move around without impediment, so as to touch any one of the four and twenty letters. Upon their separating one from another, into distant countries, they agreed to withdraw themselves punctually into their closets at a certain hour of the day, and to converse with one another by means of their invention. By this means they talked together across a whole continent, and communicated their thoughts to one another in an instant, over climes or mountains, seas or deserts."

This strange vagary of an ancient writer, quoted by Addison for the amusement of his readers, has wonderfully become a fixed truth in the progress of modern science. How little did Addison dream that what he was suggesting in a vein of playful humor, should take the minds of wise men to accomplish, until the whole invention should be perfected by which two continents are now bound together, and thought is made to pass between with the rapidity almost of its own motions.

THE CAT OUT OF THE BAG.—The American Standard, in its last issue talks about "the advantage of conciliating Montgomery's friends for our State ticket, and asks, "if we join in this measure, (the nomination of a candidate for Congress in opposition to Mr. Montgomery) what becomes of our own county ticket." What does this language mean? Has a bargain been struck, by which the Montgomery Democrats of Fayette are to support our State ticket, and also the opposition ticket in that county, in consideration of the endorsement given to our recreant Representative, by the opposition County Convention. This language would really seem to indicate that such was the case. We were well satisfied all along, that Mr. Montgomery and his friends had planned the same game in Fayette that he attempted, here, namely, promising success to the opposition county ticket, if he was only allowed to walk over the track for Congress, without opposition. We are now more fully convinced than ever, that there is an understanding of this sort. The Standard and its Fayette may fancy they have been driving a good bargain; but they will find to their sorrow that their prize will turn out a blank. Yet the very paper that thus inadvertently avows its complicity with a plot of this kind, prates about conspiracies, and goes into hysterics over the fact that Jonathan Knight exchanges salutations with John I. Dawson on the streets of Brownsville.—Wash. Repub.

OPENING OF THE ENGLISH STATE PAPER OFFICE.—Hitherto the history of the American colonies has been lacking in some vital parts, owing to the restrictions placed upon access to or use of the records preserved in the State Paper Office in London. The policy of the English government has undergone a change. It is now considered that nothing can be lost by an exposure of the secrets which up to a recent date have been so rigidly guarded; and at the present moment it is not more difficult to obtain access to any of the records of the State Paper Office during the period of the colonial history of the United States, than to the books of a well-regulated library. For two or three years Sir John Romilly has been occupied in having them duly calendered and indexed. The records of the office will add much valuable matter to the history of the original thirteen States, and to the none more than that of Virginia. A correspondent of the Richmond Enquirer sends that paper some documents which show that the records are likely also to throw side lights upon the history of many men of the era.—N. Y. Post.

DOUGLAS and Lincoln have had their first contest of the campaign. They met at Ottawa, Ill. last Saturday, and measured swords. Douglas was nervous, almost frantic, and used some very harsh terms. His opponent was cool, deliberate, argumentative, and gentlemanly in his bearing, and as a consequence had the decided advantage of his adversary. Douglas was guilty of a deliberate meanness. He attempted to palm off on his hearers a series of resolutions that had been passed by an Abolition county convention, a few years ago, as the platform adopted by the Illinois Republicans at their State Convention in 1854. He was convicted of the attempted deception, and thus stands arraigned before the public for the commission of a crime as base as forgery itself. Must not his friends, who are possessed in the least of honorable feelings, feel ashamed of their leader? In the evening the Republicans of Ottawa held an enthusiastic meeting; the Democrats skulked off into the dark corners. Lincoln and Douglas had five other meetings during the campaign.

THE editor of the New York Times writes from Stratford-on-Avon, that the "restoration," of the Shakspeare house is simply rebuilding. The old house is torn away, and a new one like it is being constructed. He says:

One half of the new house looks like a perfectly new house. The old style of building, it is true, has been imitated—but the timbers and other material are all new, and the whole has the appearance of a thoroughly mod
