PUBLISHED DAILY AND WEEKLY BY S. RIDDLE & CO., FIFTH STREET, ABOVE SMITHFIELD.

LIVING BEYOND ONE'S MEANS.—We have once or twice, recently, alluded to a practice prevalent among business men, of living beyond their means—and thus bringing upon themselves a failure which was no fault of their mode of business, but only of their manner of living. It is not safe to look only at a man's store, to know his standing in business: you must look also at his house. His splendid profile may entirely merge themselves in his splendid dwelling; so that if he should suddenly fail, his assets would be found to consist chiefly of carpets, mirrors, frescoes, pictures, marbles, furniture, and a variety of similar articles, all belonging to the inside of a "brown stone front." Now, if what is poured into the top of a pitcher runs out through a hole in the bottom, it will take continual pouring to keep it full; a sudden stoppage will leave it empty and dry. We need hardly say that it takes a large business to support a fine house; and when the fine house taxes the business to its utmost, a small reverse, which otherwise a man would hardly have felt, may now occasion his ruin. The foundation of a man's fortune is laid on two corner stones; one in his store, the other in his house. If he builds too heavily on either of these, he will have the whole roof down on him. Many a man who has been known as the "architect of his own fortune," has built unwisely upon one or other of these foundations and has at last been surprised with a worse fall than the tumbling of the State Arsenal!

It is true, the line of difference between living within their means, and living beyond them, may sometimes be difficult to draw so as to give the greatest limit to free expenditure. For instance a man may be able to keep a horse and buggy, and live within his means, who, if he were to keep two horses, and a carriage, would be living beyond them. A man may keep a fine house in the city, and be well able to afford it, who as soon as he builds another in the country, is going farther than his money will follow. A man may give an ice cream party, and not feel it, who, when he gives a fancy dress ball, will suffer for it a month afterwards. A man may pick his teeth on the steps of the St. Nicholas, and be living frugally within his means, who, if he were once to pay for his dinner at that hotel would not have a cent left for his supper! When a man is conscious that he is straining a point for a splendid house, or a fast horse, or an extravagant table, he may be sure that he is the man who is living beyond his "means."

The temptations to such extravagance, in such a city this, are very great. In this respect, the improved architectural taste exhibited in our modern dwelling houses has exerted a favorable and also an unfavorable influence on the community; favorable, so far as the progress of art and the culture of the people are concerned; but unfavorable, in having incited a desire for ambitious display in which men seek to indulge themselves beyond their means. In fact, nine out of every ten opinions given in accounting for the Commercial Crisis, alleged general extravagance as the cause of the revulsion. When one-third of the merchants of a great city hang one-third of their fortunes upon the lace mantles of their wives, merely to make a glitter by gas light at a grand soiree, it is not at all surprising that the ghost of a mercantile crisis should be seen striking behind the guests after they leave in the dead hours of the night! The expense of a well-dressed wife or daughter in the simple article of jewelry, for a single evening, is oftentimes as much as would originally have bought the entire island of Manhattan before the time of Peter Stuyvesant! When the "little bills" for these trifles are sent in and paid, Crisis may be imagined bringing up the rear, like Banquo's Ghost!

We write a true epitaph when we say that many a man's failures has resulted, not from losses in his business, but from losses to which he is blind because they are hidden in parlor carpets, enameled furniture, and gilded cornices, or in pearl necklaces, topaz brooches, and diamond rings!

If it be true that "Economy leads to wealth," it must be equally true that Extravagance leads to Poverty; and almost the greatest extravagance in which business men are now tempted is that of entertaining display. Dr. Franklin said that "the road to wealth is as plain as the road to market." If Poor Richard were to come again and point it out, he would likely advise that it be not carpeted with Brussels, except in its extreme further end. N. Y. Independent, 18th, inst.

A child recently fell over the precipice of Dover Cliff, 300 feet high, and escaped with a few bruises. The cliff has by successive falls lost its perpendicular at many places, and at no place is the abrupt descent more than 70 feet. With the fall even thus broken, the child's escape was miraculous.

THE ITALIAN EXILES AT QUEENSTOWN.—The Cork Southern Reporter gives an explanation of the arrival, at Queenstown, of the Neapolitan patriot, Count or Colonel Poerio, with his companions, sixty-nine in number, including one Bishop and seven Priests. They were permitted to transport themselves to New York, the Neapolitan Government stipulating to give each of them, on arrival at New York, the sum of $180 "to begin life" with anew in America. On the arrival of the vessel (the David Stuart) at Cadiz, outside the Straits of Gibraltar, the refugees, who greatly out-numbered the crew, the latter being only seventeen in number, rose in "mutiny," and insisted that the captain (Prentiss) should steer direct for Cork harbor. To this request the captain, of course, gave a flat refusal; but he was forcibly deprived of the command of the vessel for the time being, and his second mate appointed in his place pro tem. The latter owed this distinction and temporary promotion to the uniform of the Galway or Lever Line, which he wore, and which gave the refugees assurance that he had sufficient experience as a mariner to be entrusted with the chief conduct of the vessel. Some of the refugees are noblemen by birth, and all, both ecclesiastics and laymen are fine looking men. The priests, in their ecclesiastical costume, were objects of intense interest to the people of Queenstown.

The London Times congratulates the Neapolitan exiles on their arrival, and says there is an instinct stronger than all political calculation which calls on England to honor these men. The Daily News and Morning Post also give them a warm welcome.

The Dublin Daily Express reports that Poerio and his fellow exiles, amounting to between 60 and 70, compelled Captain Prentiss, of the David Stuart, as soon as the Neapolitan war steamer Stromboli left them, at 200 miles from land, to steer direct for Cork. In this they were assisted by a young sailor, Raffaelli Settembrini, son of one of the exiles, who had shipped with the captain at Cadiz, and signed articles as one of the crew. As soon as the exiles landed at Queenstown the enthusiasm of some of them rose to such a pitch that they actually kissed the soil upon which they first planted foot as free men. Some of them state that their sight has grown dim from long imprisonment, and some seem rather prematurely grey; but there is not anything in their appearance to indicate their having endured peculiar hardships. It is very probable that the great majority will seek refuge in Sardinia. Under any circumstances, Poerio, whose health has been greatly enfeebled, will, we believe, proceed there.

We learn that during the heavy fog on Friday afternoon, three young men, named Edward Crawford, son of William Crawford, deceased, Chauncy Rogers, son of Harry Rogers, deceased, and ——— ——— also son of a widowed lady, went out in a boat from the shore opposite North East, for the purpose of setting fishing nets, and have not since returned. It is supposed that after wandering about in the fog in a vain effort to reach the shore, the boat filled and sank, and the three found a watery grave. Mr. Crawford was about 17 years old—the other two 20 or 21. This calamity should admonish young men never to venture out in the Lake under circumstances of such extreme peril. —Erie Gaz.

In regard to the article in the Churchman, stating that a new daily paper was to be started here, with Mr. Spalding of the Courier and Enquirer, and Rev. Dr. McClintock as editors, the Courier and Enquirer says:

"Will the Churchman do the favor to inform us upon what authority the foregoing announcement is made? If true, we are entitled to be advised of the fact; while if it be but a mere rumor, the Churchman should be the last Press to indulge in the trespassing practice of using names and compromising persons without just warrant, for the petty purpose of being ahead of its contemporaries in the tittle tattle of the city."

THE Evansville (Ind.) Enquirer, of the 15th inst., says, in relation to the Wheat crop of southern Indiana: We learn from farmers who drop in our office daily, that the Wheat crop looks well generally throughout this region—much better, at least, than they expected a few weeks ago. We are glad to hear this, as we had received some unfavorable reports a few days ago; the prosperity of the country depends on the bountiful crops of the forthcoming season.

THE Charleston (S. C.) Mercury, speaking of Southern candidates for the Presidency, says: "There are some twenty Richmonds in the field, all challenging fate at the hands of the terrible Black Republican Richard of 1860."

THE GROWING WHEAT CROP.—Our exchanges from all sections of the State report the growing wheat crop to be in a most promising condition. During many years the wheat crop never looked so well in March, as at the present time. It is most likely, also, that more spring wheat will be sown than usual.

Conversation with gentlemen who have had opportunities for extended observation during the last few weeks, fully confirms the reports of the newspapers. A citizen of Detroit, who is a most active observer, as well as a thoroughly practical business man, and one
