GARIBALDI'S HISTORY.—We give below a most interesting biographical sketch of the celebrated Italian chief Garibaldi, translated from the Siecle, a Parisian journal:

Joseph Garibaldi was born at Nice, on the 4th of July, 1807; his family have always lived in that seaport, and several of them are living there now. Joseph, brought up on the coast among sailors and fishermen, was indebted to this rude apprenticeship of life for a part of his physical and moral energy. Already at that time the child was seen to possess most of the qualities since developed in the man. Adventurous and brave, he displayed in his intercourse with his comrades an extraordinary energy.

Garibaldi entered the Sardinian navy at an early age, and soon distinguished himself by his courage and coolness. Implicated in 1834 in the insurrectional movement, this young seaman, compromised at Genoa on account of a liberal conspiracy, found himself compelled to take refuge in France. He traveled on foot across the mountains to Nice, where he lay concealed two days in a friend's house, who, by dressing him in the clothes of a farmer of his, got him across the Var. After passing two years at Marseilles, chiefly in pursuit of his mathematical studies, Garibaldi embarked in an Egyptian corvette, to go and serve as a naval officer in the fleet of the Bey of Tunis. As he did not meet there with a part to satisfy his active mind, he could not remain longer than a few months. So he soon set out for Rio Janeiro. The province of Rio Grande del Sol had erected itself into a republic.

Our adventurer made an offer of his sword to the military Government of Uruguay, and received the chief command of the squadron intended to act against Buenos Ayres. The contest lasted two years. During this time the new commander, quite in his element, performed such prodigies of valor, that the natives said of him, "It is not a man, but a devil;" and so superstition got mixed up with his name. He had been seen in several encounters to dash with his troops into the thickest of the fight, then re-appear safe and sound, and always victorious, from these terrible engagements. There the fighting was always hand to hand.

Garibaldi's influence over his troops is something wonderful. His form, Herculean strength, his fine, energetic and expressive head—everything, even his picturesque costume, contributes to increase the prestige he wields. At Salta he is surrounded—he with 1,000 men—by 3,000 enemies. What does he do? He stands their fire without stirring; lets them come up close, then charges them with the bayonet, and sends them flying. The Government of Montevideo decreed on that day that the Italian legion had deserved well of the country, and it should take the right, the post of honor, even when with native troops, in every engagement.

The insurrection of the Farinchi, of 1848, brought Garibaldi back to Nice. A part of his legion accompanied him. With it he acted prudently in the war of independence against the Austrians in the Southern Tyrol, where so sharp shooter, he incessantly harrassed their army.

At Rome Garibaldi was the soul of the resistance. Monsieur Vaillant, in his remarkable report of the operations during the siege, did justice to the energy and skill of his adversary. It was impossible, in fact, to make more of the poor resources at the disposal of the besieged. The volunteers fought there like veteran troops. On May 30, the Austrians, he defeated the Neapolitans who were superior in numbers to his own. A few days later, at Velletri, where he was severely wounded, he was still to win the honors of the day. Finally, he sustained for a whole month the attacks of our valiant army, and as all the officers admit, with admirable presence of mind.

In the last council of war met at Rome, Garibaldi being called upon to state his opinion, proposed the employment of extreme measures; but they were not approved. He then left the sacred city with the remnant of his little army, traversed the enemy's lines, and withdrew to the neighborhood of St. Marin. There his troops disbanded. Garibaldi reached Genoa with two hundred soldiers, who had refused to leave him. At the end of a few months he returned to America, where he engaged very actively in trade, and industry. About 1852 we find him again in command of the Peruvian army. When the war ceased he returned home to Nice.

Whatever sentiments the world may entertain as to the services rendered by this guerilla chieftain, it cannot fail to perceive in him the essential qualities of the captain, and especially his extraordinary ascendency over his companions in arms.

His wife, also, was a heroine; she was slain at her husband's side by the Austrians. She had never left him on the battle field, either in America or Italy.

A BALTIMOREAN'S NOTION OF THE LATE SLAVEHOLDER'S CONVENTION.—A letter from Baltimore to the N. Y. Post, speaks very disrespectfully of the late Convention:

"The mountain has been in severe labor, and the mouse that has been brought forth is small indeed. We have had here, within the last day or two, an uninvited party of gentlemen from the counties of this State, calling themselves 'The Slaveholders' Convention.' This affair was started on the eastern shore of Maryland, and grew out of the circumstance of a mob that tarred and feathered an inoffensive citizen of Kent county, charged with being an 'abolitionist.' This body of men invited themselves to come to Baltimore, where they have no sympathizers except a certain Beale II. Richardson, editor of an obscure Democratic newspaper, and an employee of the Custom House. They were headed by an old ex-Judge, who, perhaps, did not know any better, and backed up by our eastern shore senator, who soon found out that he was making a fool of himself, and so backed down. The people here have given them the regular cold shoulder, and they have generally departed for their homes (to enjoy the blessings of slavery and look after their corn and niggers,) ashamed of themselves and of each other.

They say, 'Baltimore ain't what they took her for,' and if they are spared, they will never come here any more; indeed some of them go the length of threatening to 'starve out this abolition city,' and will, hereafter, if all will only 'join,' send their produce for sale to a southern port, and in their zeal and wrath, they have already a project on foot to establish a city and a market in one of the many eligible pine swamps between this and the mouth of the Potomac. They say, 'We ain't to take it as we have done; no we ain't; Baltimore has cheated us long enough, and now insulted us, and we'll quit her.' Without joking, there never was seen a set of more pitiable, crest fallen donkeys than these same slaveholding country gentlemen, who came hither under the impression that they were about the biggest men in the country, found themselves contemptible, (they ought to have known that before,) and so disappeared to be seen no more.

I send you a copy of the last day's proceedings, I think one gentleman proposed that every poor man in the State 'ought to have one nigger.' As there are not niggers enough to give every poor man one, encouragement would have to be given immediately to more extensive breeding and importing. This, you know, would add to the wealth of the State, and would be a decided step forward in this age of progress."

REV. CALVIN W. RUTER IS DEAD!—This old and tried servant in the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church died suddenly on Saturday evening, June 11th, at his residence, near Patriot, Switzerland county, Indiana.—Father Ruter preached a sermon at Florence on Saturday morning, which was characterized by his usual zeal and ability. After returning to his home, he fell down and expired without speaking a word. He died, as he had lived, with his armor on, and with his face to the great enemy of his creed. The news of the old man's departure will be received in general sorrow, and cause strong men to weep.—Madison Courier.

SOCIAL LIFE NOT THE CHIEF END OF MAN.—A popular lecturer at Chicago lately advocated with some plausibility, the drinking and dancing customs of other countries, as a means of promoting social intercourse, and adding to the animation and grace of general society. To this the Congregational Herald replies with some very apt remarks:

"The value of social life has been unduly magnified. It is of far less moment than domestic life. That a man should please and entertain his neighbors or acquaintances, for a few moments or hours, it may be, while he is with them dwindles into insignificance by the side of the question, whether he makes happy the companion of his life, and the children whose weal or woe for time and eternity, depend much on a father's influence. That a woman should be fascinating at the social party, what is it compared with shedding the radiance of love and kindness on husband and children in her family? Any social life that would interfere with these most sacred home duties, will prove a curse, not al
