A YOUNG LADY RESCUED FROM THE CONVENT OF GRAY NUNS IN TOLEDO.—From the Detroit Tribune of the 20th, we get the account of a remarkable rescue of a young lady from a convent. The Tribune says:

"We have just learned the particulars of one of those cases of sudden disappearance, anxious and long-baffled search, and final recovery, which now and then, come to the light from the mainly secret history of the Roman Catholic Convents. The story is in every respect strictly true, but for reasons of propriety—as the family do not covet newspaper publicity—we suppress all names."

The lady in question was an only daughter of a wealthy Englishman, recently a member of the Canadian Cabinet. The daughter had been educated in Paris, and there fell under Roman Catholic influence. She returned to Montreal a devoted Romanist, the idol of her parents who lavished money and affection without stint upon her. Some weeks since she disappeared, suddenly, mysteriously, leaving a note to the effect that she had become a nun.

The parents were stunned, and the father then opened his eyes to the effect of the teachings in the way of which he had thrown his daughter. He commenced a search for her.

Application was first made to the highest ecclesiastical functionary at Montreal, lord bishop, we believe is the title. In that city is a convent of gray nuns. The father suspected his daughter had been taken there. He went to the official, announced his loss and the object of his visit, implored his assistance and offered anything which he might see fit to ask, even if it took his entire estate. The ecclesiastic expressed great sympathy with the father, declared that the convent was open to his inspection from top to bottom, and assured him that if he knew where his daughter was he would gladly restore her to the arms of her sorrowing parents. But no daughter was found in the convent. Subsequent events, however, revealed the fact that she was hidden at this very time in the convent, and that the prelate knew it.

The father soon learned that the daughter had left Montreal. He went to Kingston, Bytown and Toronto, and at the latter place, through the use of money, learned that his daughter had been sent to Detroit or Toledo, that she was sick and wasting away. The father visited Detroit—arriving there a week ago last Sunday—and put the police on the track, by mean while, hastening to Toledo. The Tribune says:

"In accordance with the plan fixed upon in this city, the father waited upon the Superior of a convent of gray nuns at Toledo, informed her in elegant French that he was a foreign tourist taking the sketches of the convents in this country, and would like to ascertain the date of its foundation, the name of its Superior, the number of its inmates and other facts of interest, and would desire further, personally, to inspect its department.

Disarmed of all suspicion, the lady led him through the convent and gave him the desired information. But among all the sisterhood he could find nowhere his daughter, and heart-sick, weary and dispirited, he was about to leave, when the Superior asked if he would like to see the school of orphans. Certainly—and into the room he was ushered. In passing a side door which was partly open, his quick glance discovered his long-sought daughter stretched upon a sick bed!

In a moment he sprang to her side and clasped her to his arms. She was so wasted, says his letter to his friend in this city which now lies before us, that he could scarcely recognize his beatiful child of six weeks before. She in her delirium was overjoyed to see him. He immediately turned upon the Superior, who stood transfixed with astonishment, and vented upon her his long pent up feelings.

He fairly trembled with rage, while he caused her to tremble with fear as he poured forth a torrent of denunciation upon her head. She stammered out an excuse to the effect that she was only obeying the orders of her superior at Montreal, of which convent this was a branch, and that she had no discretion in the matter. But the father was too full of joy to waste time in bickerings there, with his sick child in his arms, and so, receiving a portion of her clothing, hastily gathered up by the affrighted nuns, he left the convent, with the prize which he had been seeking day and night for six weeks, with an agony of anxiety that only parental love can experience. A carriage was in waiting with friends to whom he had been introduced, and to whose residence the party repaired. A telegraph was dispatched to the heart-broken mother at Montreal, who was worn down with sickness and suspense.

This occurred one week ago yesterday. By easy stages the invalid daughter was conveyed to Saratoga, where a letter, just received, announces a halt for restoration and health, while the overjoyed mother was hourly expected to crown their happiness and make it once more complete. The narrative which is strictly true, will take its own comment with it."

SOME OF THE DANGERS OF PIKE'S PEAK.—The P. P., correspondent of the Boston Journal presents the following by no means attractive picture of some of the perils of Pike's Peak:

"Within the last few days great conflagrations have been raging in the mountains, near Gregory's Diggings. The forests have not been burned over for several years. The dry dead trunks of the fallen pines, and the caps and the leaves of the living trees, full of pitch, are like tinder before the devouring element. When once kindled, it sweeps on with incredible speed, from which it is often difficult to escape. A gentleman who has just arrived from the diggings was compelled to ride several miles upon a fleet animal to avoid the body of the fire; and two or three branches of it, which he was compelled to cross left coars upon his face which he will wear for weeks. He described the heat of the burning pines as terrible at the distance of several yards; and the smoke is so dense that it is difficult to avoid suffocation. In passing over a burnt district, he discovered the blackened, charred bodies of three men, who had lost their lives in the flames. They were several yards apart, and were evidently running for a place of safety when the fiery death overtook them. Their clothing was completely consumed; their gun-barrels, a case knife and a quantity of gold were the only articles found near, and there was no means of identifying them. An inquest was held and the remains went to swell the score of nameless and unmarked graves which have already resulted from the Pike's Peak migration."

KANSAS.—A Bill of Rights containing twenty-three sections has been reported to the Constitutional Convention of Kansas. It sets out with the declaration that all political power is inherent in the people; prohibits slavery in the State; proclaims religious toleration; defends the soundness of the writ of habeas corpus; protects the freedom of legislative debate; forbids the transportation from the State of any party for any offence committed within the State limits; prohibits imprisonment for debt; insures to naturalized citizens the full privileges accorded to natives; and declares that no citizen of the State shall be held to appear before the supreme court of the United States on appeal from the Supreme Court of the State, but that when appeals are taken on questions of inter-State law they shall only be through or from the District Courts of the United States. A preamble which precedes the Bill of Rights, recites the fundamental laws of the body politic, declares the purpose of the instrument and defines the boundaries of the State of Kansas. At the latest date the Convention had not acted upon it.
