THE GRAVE OF SENATOR BRODERICK.—Not far from the entrance to Lone Mountain Cemetery, and located where the eyes of future generations will rest upon it whenever the great gateway is passed, is the grave of Senator Broderick. The body has been taken from the receiving tomb, and placed in a deep grave of brick masonry, cemented with great solidity inside and out, and impervious for ages from wet and air. The metallic coffin was lowered into this receptacle, which was then built closely in with brick and hermetically sealed. The coffin is nearly six feet below the surface of the earth, and the brick grave or tomb is so arranged that any excavations here-after necessary to be made, in order to prepare the foundations for the monument will not disturb it. A plain mound, like that in every graveyard, is all that marks the last resting-place of Mr. Broderick, but parties are now placing a circular iron railing as a protection to the grave. The space within is to be sodded, and this will be completed during the next week—the railing being already on the ground. The pillars will be set into blocks of granite. The locality in which the remains of the late Senator are placed known as "Mount Vernon;" and, save "Cannon Hill," is the most elevated portion of the Cemetery. It is in the southern part of the great enclosure, and, from beside the grave, the eye commands one of the finest prospects to be obtained in this part of the State. Between the range of hills to the westward, two glimpses are had of the blue Pacific, and, in clear weather, the Farralones rear their distant summits above the waves, dim, shadowy mounds on the watery horizon. Northward, a broad sweep of San Francisco bay opens to the view, with the long reach up towards San Pablo, and the picturesque mountains and jagged cliffs of Marin county; and eastward the outlying suburban residence of the city are just discerned straggling over the hills. At this season of the year, before the rough ocean winds of the summer months have commenced to blow, there is a quiet beauty about our metropolitan cemetery which attracts many visitors. Now may be seen carriages winding among the circitous avenues which lead to the last resting-places of the dead, and here and there silent groups of relatives and friends of departed loved ones, reviving and memories, or coming to strew the cherished spot with flowers. Often this is done for the grave of Broderick. An attendant of the place informs us that not a day passes but some friends (or relatives, as had none) place bouquets or single flowers there. Yesterday the offering was confined to a single calla lily. Of a still day the beating of the surf along the ocean coast is plainly heard, and now and then comes in the hoarse voices of sea birds and elephants, while the foliage at a short distance is vocal with the note of birds. Occasionally a wild rabbit starts out of the under-brush, or a squirrel springs nimbly along the ground to his snug retreat. The top mounts of Mount Vernon, however, is quite bare and rugged, being entirely without foliage, and is yet entirely unimproved. Numerous costly tombs, and, since the selection of the place for the Brodrick monument, a considerable portion of the ground thereabouts has been taken up. The lot for the monument has been donated by the proprietors of the cemetery, and as large a space may be occupied as the monument committee deem it advisable to improve. The monument to Broderick should be a plain rugged column of granite, rough-hewn and massive, as was the character of the iron man whose name it will commemorate.—[Alta Californian.]
