PITTSBURGH:
FRIDAY MORNING, MAY 3, 1861.

HOW TO DEAL WITH TREASON.

We said yesterday that there is nothing for which the Southern traitors have any respect except force, bravery and promptitude in action, and every day adds evidence of the truth of the sentiment. Take an example, which we clip from the letter of the Washington correspondent of the New York Times of yesterday:

"Ex-Senator Cooper, of Pennsylvania, is a native of Frederick, Maryland. Visiting that place a day or two ago he was threatened with violence, and ordered to leave town instantly. This he declined to do, but on the contrary called a public meeting, made a Union speech, which brought over to his side 110 men, who, under his lead, rescued the arsenal at that place from the Secessionists, and put it in the hands of the Union men."

Another example is found in the present temper of the people of Annapolis towards the Northern troops who are pouring through that place by thousands. One week ago they would have fought with them and driven them from the State, had it been in their power; now these people and the troops are on the best terms.

Here is a sample of the kind of stuff that passes current among the ignorant and barbaric hordes who compose the army of secession. A man who was organizing a corps of infantry in Richmond, (as we are informed by a Northern man who had to do military duty to save his life,) told his men that they had nothing to do but to march to glory and wealth. "What," said he, "could a Northern army do on our sterile hills—they would starve to death. But you," he continued, "have but to march to Washington, and lay that in ashes—then to Philadelphia, which is rich in all kinds of wealth—from that through all the North; there is a village every five miles, and every village has a bank, and every bank has a vault of specie, and you have but to help yourselves." This, he says, is but a sample of the speeches made daily to the troops at Richmond.

Now would it not be a mercy to undeceive those poor deluded wretches. They rush into this mad crusade because they are taught to believe that the men of the North are nothing but a set of poltroons, and that a very little fighting will put them in possession of any amount of booty. The story is universally current among the Southern people that the clerks of Baltimore rushed out of their stores, disarmed the Seventh Massachusetts regiment, killed 100 of them, and drove the remainder back. The leaders know better, but they keep the knowledge to themselves.

The retreat of the Pennsylvania troops from Cockeyville—for of course they regard it as a retreat—could and would be used with great effect to confirm them in the delusion that the men of the North will not fight, that they are cowards, and that all that is required is a formidable demonstration on their part to bring the country under the dominion of Jefferson Davis. "One Kentuckian is a match for ten of those fellows," said a rich, but ignorant planter, speaking of the people on the Northern side of the Ohio, and that idea has full possession of the brains of nearly all Southern men.

Had it not been for the "military necessity" of marching large bodies of troops through Maryland, in order to reach the capital, Maryland would have been swept off by the advancing flood of treason; but the mere sight of the soldiers was sufficient to restore the ruffians to their senses. It was well for that State that Washington lay on its Southern border.

We think this secession movement is not as formidable as it looks. It is of mushroom growth. It originated in the hearts of the worst men of the South, and is sustained by violence and terror. It rests upon delusion and is fed on lies. There is nothing noble or generous in it. Thousands who are constrained to vote for it, and shout for it, and it may be, fight for it, hate it. They feel in their inmost souls that it is the blackest treason; but they dare not resist; and thus their weight is added to the living avalanche, which, like the swinish herd we read of, is rushing down "a steep place" to destruction. "Suffer us to go into the herd of swine," said the ejected devils, and he said, "Go;" and so did the ejected rulers of this country, last fall, enter into the multitude who are now carrying them with such velocity in the same direction the pigs went. "Rule or ruin," was the motto in both cases.

Hopeful Signs.

Things begin to look brighter and more hopeful. Maryland seems to be settling down firmly in her adherence to the Union, while every day adds strength to the government. This week brings the twenty days allotted in the President's proclamation for the breaking up and dispersing of the rebel combinations and forces to a close, when we think a vigorous course of measures will begin, and be continued, until the work is done. It is impossible to tell whether the struggle will be a severe one or not; but we earnestly beg the gallant men who have so freely offered their services to the government to maintain their organizations and perfect their discipline, so as to be ready to respond promptly to the call of the President, and render good service when they are called. They may be needed soon; for the news in this paper indicates that the government is now acting with great vigor.

What a Change!

On Friday of last week Secession was triumphant in Baltimore; soldiers were attacked and murdered in the streets, and loyal citizens were driven from the city.

On Wednesday of this week the stars and stripes were hoisted on the Custom House, the Post Office and the Exchange, amid the acclamations of the people. Speaking of the raising of the flag on the Custom House, the Patriot says:

"As soon as the colors were let loose to the breeze, a scene of the wildest enthusiasm ensued. Cheer after cheer was given for the emblem of the United States, and three cheers for President Lincoln. A Glee Club was in attendance, and, after the flag was hoisted, sang the 'Star Spangled Banner,' and the 'Red, White and Blue,' amidst the shouts and plaudits of the multitude. The whole scene was one of intense interest, and was participated in by all present."

The news received from Harrisburg, Wednesday, that the last requisition from Pennsylvania would not be required by the Government, not only disappointed the enthusiastic volunteer who looked forward to the acceptance of his company, and at least, one campaign against the rebellious traitors who have taken up arms to subvert the Constitution and laws of their country, but equally disappointed and mortified the graver and less impulsive portion of our citizens. Men asked one another, what does this mean? Are we to have a hollow truce, which they will call peace, patched up for a while, till the traitors find a better opportunity against their country? But the anxiety, though natural, was unnecessary. A full explanation of the matter came yesterday morning, showing that the communication from Washington was only to correct a misunderstanding of the amount of the requisition, and had nothing of the evil significance which had been given to it.

When such misimpressions are made, it is a matter of course to exclaim against the supposed want of firmness and energy in the Administration—but if the men that compose it fail in these qualities, where should we go to find others to whom we could place more reliance?

Both houses of the Maryland Legislature have passed resolutions affirming the right of the general government to allow its troops to march through Maryland without hindrance, to defend the national capital.

[It may have been proper to make such an affirmation in Maryland; but, except for the benefit of some mad Marylanders, it was surely a work of supererogation.]

"Hypocrisy of Northern Statesmen."

This is the caption of a bitter tirade in a late number of the Richmond Enquirer, in which the editor comes down upon the "Northern allies" of the South in unmeasured terms of denunciation, or, to speak more classically, "like a thousand brick." He first shoots at the shoal, and then singles out a few big fish, Millard Fillmore, Gen. Cass, Buchanan, Douglas, Benj. F. Butler, and Franklin Pierce, each of whom gets a shot at his especial turpitude and bad faith. He then sums up in this vigorous style:

"These facts carry on their face their own proper commentary. They clearly demonstrate the fact that the Northern 'allies,' upon whom we chiefly relied, are as 'false as hell,' and that our only safety, is in the erection of a wall between us and them 'as high as Heaven.' The separation of the South from the abolitionized government of the North must be eternal."

The idea of that wall is very suggestive. In the first place it would be a first-rate job for the stone masons, provided there were any cash in Jeff. Davis' locker to pay for it. It moreover reminds us of that unfortunate job that was undertaken many years ago on the plain of Shinar, to build a tower "that should reach to Heaven," but which resulted in nothing but confusion, and a dissolution of the Union. We would suggest that a ditch as deep as —— would suit them better, and that they can do themselves.

We beg our Richmond cotemporary not to fly off the handle so easily. He is excited; those old allies of his are cool. He is drunk; they are sober. They know what they are about; he does not. Hold on; for after all it may be only a lover's quarrel.

Trouble in Missouri.

Governor Jackson, of Missouri, has called together the volunteer forces of that State, for a grand parade to be held in St. Louis, this week. It seems a strange time for a military holiday display, in a border State. We know that the Government are fully aware of the position of affairs in Missouri. General Jim Lane, of Kansas, is in the city yesterday, on his way west; should trouble arise in Missouri, we have full confidence in the ability of the Union men of St. Louis, backed by the Government, to check-mate any movement of Governor Jackson, or his aiders and abettors.

SPRINGFIELD (MASS.) ARMORY.—We are glad to learn from the Springfield Republican, that there are ninety thousand muskets remaining in the Springfield armory, after supplying the States of Massachusetts and New York. There are three hundred and fifty men employed, who turn out about fifteen hundred muskets in a month, and by putting in more machinery and running double time, the amount may be raised to from four thousand to five thousand a month.

The Reinforcement of Fort Pickens.

The Atlantic sailed from New York, under sealed orders, on Sunday morning, April 7. She had on board three hundred and fifty-eight soldiers, infantry, artillery, and sappers and miners, together with immense supplies of military stores, ammunition, provisions, and two batteries of artillery. Captain A. G. Gray was in command of the Atlantic during the trip, and, as the subjoined report of the Purser will show, he successfully carried out his instructions:

We arrived and dropped anchor in the outer roads of Key West, three miles from Fort Taylor. At 2 P M on Saturday, the 13th, one of our boats was sent to Fort Taylor, conveying Colonel Brown and his staff, who had prolonged interviews with the officers, both military and civil. At 7 P M we commenced receiving additional troops, ordnance, ordnance stores, and shells, which were placed on a lighter and towed out to the Atlantic by the United States steamer Crusader, Captain Craven.

The labor was continued without cessation until 4 A M of Sunday the 14th, and at 6 A M we weighed anchor and steered for Tortugas, where we anchored close to Fort Jefferson at 2 P M on the same day. At this point we took on board more officers, troops, laborers, howitzers, gun carriages, materials, &c., and at 9 P M were under way for our final destination, which was now known only to Col. Brown and Capt. Meigs of the army, and to Capt. Gray of the Atlantic.

During the night and the next day great curiosity was manifested, and although the ship's course seemed to indicate Fort Pickens, yet it was not until the evening of Monday, the 15th, that the secret was disclosed and the reinforcement of Fort Pickens openly announced. Up to this time all was conjecture, but now the countenance of all on board beamed with the knowledge of an approaching event. Activity and preparation took the place of supineness and uncertainty, and the fact that Fort Pickens could be and should be reinforced was settled that night.

FORT PICKENS REINFORCED IN BOATS.

On Tuesday, the 16th, at 6½ P M, we anchored off Santa Rosa Island, (Fort Pickens being on its western extremities,) four miles from shore, close by the frigate Sabine, the flag-ship of the squadron, Commodore Adams. After communicating with the commander and naval officers present, we took in tow the boats of the fleet, some twenty in number, and after dark weighed anchor and stood on shore, all lights being extinguished, and came to anchor within a mile of Fort Pickens, and in direct range of the guns of Fort McRee and the water batteries, and three quarters of a mile from the beach, in four fathoms of water.

At a quarter past nine the first boat pushed off for the beach with Col. Brown and Capt. Meigs, who were the first to meet the intrepid Slemmer and his command. During the embarkation of the troops in the boats, the signal from Fort Pickens for an apprehended attack was made by the sending up of rockets. This signal was repeated and hastened the operations. Capt. Vogdes and other officers in the Fort were astonished at the rapidity of the reinforcement. Before midnight, the majority of the officers and soldiers (five hundred in all) were safely in the Fort, and although a heavy surf was running during the night, no accident of any kind occurred.

This successful landing took place three days after the bombardment and surrender of Fort Sumter, a fact well known on the main land, but not known at Fort Pickens, nor by the forces afloat.

MORE TROOPS LANDED.

Early on the morning of the 17th, the remaining troops were landed, except the artillery men of Captain Barry's company, who remained to land with their horses. At 5 A. M. we again weighed anchor and sailed to the eastward, and anchored about three and a half miles from Fort Pickens and half a mile from the beach. This point was selected as the best place for landing the horses. This difficult work was commenced in the afternoon, continued during the night, and finished on the morning of the 18th.

THE LANDING COVERED BY NAVAL VESSELS.

The United States steam frigate Powhatan, commanded by Captain David D. Porter, arrived on the afternoon of the 17th, and after communicating with the flag ship, took position just ahead of us, in order to cover the future landing. In this movement she was followed by the Brooklyn, Captain Poor, which anchored under our stern. The Wyandotte was cruising about. The Sabine, St. Louis and Supply being outside about three miles distant.

The boats of all the ships of the squadron were actively engaged in landing troops and stores, &c., from the night of the 16th until the morning of the 23d. The Illinois, with reinforcements, arrived at midnight on Friday the 19th, and her troops were landed the next morning.

SUBSEQUENT PROCEEDINGS.

Seven of the horses were lost—four died on the passage, one was drowned alongside, one had his neck broken in the surf, and one died from exhaustion on reaching the shore. The forage and light artillery were landed simultaneously with the horses. On the 18th the landing of the general cargo of heavy and light ordnance, ammunition, provisions, &c., &c., was fairly commenced and continued with but partial interruption until the forenoon of Tuesday, 23d, when she was finally discharged, to the great gratification of all concerned.

The position of the Powhatan and Brooklyn was such that their guns could sweep Santa Rosa Island and prevent a landing from the main land; and at the same time shielded the hull of the Atlantic. At no time was steam allowed to go down, so that in case of attack or gale, or any emergency, we were ready to go offshore. On Monday Colonel Brown, the Commander of the United States forces in Florida, gave to Captain Gray, in Fort Pickens, the necessary certificate and orders and despatches for Key West.

On Tuesday Captain Meigs, the indefatigable engineer of the expedition, came on board, and at noon we were passing through the fleet, saluting and saluted, on our way to Key West for coal. We arrived at Key West at 6 A M of the 25th, making the run in forty-two hours. We were here disappointed in procuring coal, as Mr. Tift, the only private owner of coal, refused to sell coal to this or any other steamer employed by the government, he being, of course, a secessionist. As the Mohawk and Crusader were ahead of us to coal at the government wharf, and to have waited would have caused great delay, we weighed anchor, and at 11 A M passed Sand Key light, and at sundown passed Moro Castle and into Havana harbor, making the run across in seven and a quarter hours.

Having completed coaling at 11:45 A. M. Saturday, 27th, we got under way, and at twenty minutes past noon we passed the Moro, and shaped our course for New York, and, after a pleasant passage, arrived off Sandy Hook this morning, making the trip in three days and eighteen and a half hours.

A Noble Woman.

Lieut. Smead, of the first artillery, who was sent by Lieut. Slemmer to Washington to apprize the Government of the absolute necessity of supplies and reinforcements at Fort Pickens, it will be recollected, took Montgomery in his way to Washington, and, having submitted his despatches to the perusal of the Confederate authorities, proceeded to Washington, where the news of his treason having anticipated him, he was struck from the roll of the army. The New York Times states that the wife and children of Lieut. Smead, with the families of several officers on duty in the South, were at Fortress Monroe. The Lieut. hastened from Washington to obtain his family and remove them southward, but his movements were not so rapid but that his crime had been reported before him. When, therefore, he presented himself at the fort, he was refused admission, the officer on duty declining "to admit a traitor" within a Federal post; the only favor conceded being that he might have an interview with Mrs. Smead without the walls. That lady met her husband and in terms of scorching eloquence, reproached him with his shame.

"Go home with you!" she exclaimed. "Never! Our paths in this world are hereafter separated. I disown you. A coward and traitor, you are no husband of mine. Henceforth you are to me as if dead. As long as I live I shall wear mourning, and be as a widow; and rest assured I shall educate our children to execrate and despise your memory as that of a recreant and a traitor."

Turning with these words, the noble and patriotic woman re entered the fort, and gave way to her anguish (feelings We may add that Mrs Smead is, like her discarded husband, a native of Georgia, and is now at Morristown, New Jersey.

IT IS MUCH TO BE REGRETTED that while in the enjoyment of health so little attention is paid by many to the preservation of so inestimable a blessing. Intemperate living, habits of indulgence, exposure to sudden changes of temperature, and neglect of the premonitory symptoms of disease are the precursors of many fatal maladies. OIL BARRELS.
Keystone Steam Barrel Factory.
The undersigned having secured the right for the State of Pennsylvania, in certain patents for making tight and slack barrels, have put up the necessary machinery for that purpose, in the above named establishment, and are now ready to furnish OIL BARRELS, made of the best materials, and CEMENTED in such a manner as, it is believed, will render them secure against leaking.
We respectfully call the attention of Refiners of Rock and Coal Oils, and producers of Crude Rock Oil, to our make of Barrels, believing that they will find it to their interest to procure an article so perfectly made and well secured by a cement, exclusively our own, against leakage. Orders may be sent to the factory, on the Allegheny river, foot of Market street, Sixth Ward, or to our office, No. 137 Fifth street, up stairs.
