[illegible]

[illegible] Bonus [illegible] Amount of policy and bonus payable at the [illegible] decease.

[illegible]	Bonus	Amount of policy and bonus payable at the [illegible] decease.
[illegible] $1000	$100 —	[illegible] 1100
[illegible] 2500	250 —	[illegible] 2750
[illegible] 4000	400 —	[illegible] 4400
[illegible] 2000	124 —	[illegible] 2175
[illegible] 5000	437 60	[illegible] 5437 60

Pamphlets containing tables of rates, and explanations of the subject, forms of application, and further information can be had at the office in Philadelphia, or on application to A. L. Rubin, Agent in Allentown.

B. W. Richards, President.

John L. Lewis, Actuary.

December 13. 7—1y

Henry Laurence,

DENTIST.

[illegible] St. Tel's Hotel, Allentown, Pa.

[illegible] returned from the City of New [illegible] where he has procured newly invented instruments which greatly facilitate the [illegible] removing teeth, making it less painful to the patient and more expeditious [illegible] operator. Also a beautiful assortment [illegible] teeth which he is prepared to insert in the most durable and artistic manner. Diseases of the gums skilfully treated, Carious Teeth filled, Nerves of Teeth destroyed without pain, and all operations pertaining to the profession performed with entire satisfaction and upon moderate terms.

[illegible] following gentlemen test[illegible] Philadelphia and Allentown [illegible]

[illegible] M. D. E. Townsend, D. D. S.

[illegible] K. Townsend, Dent.

[illegible] L. R. Kocker Dent.

[illegible] P. Shaus, M. D.

[illegible] Romig, Jr. M. D.

[illegible] fraternously [illegible] difficult [illegible]

[illegible] ly

[illegible] Store

Miscellaneous Selections.

A tale of the Camp.

The advanced guard of the army on its way to Monterey, had run out of the town of Marin a considerable force of Mexicans, who had left their dinners to be eaten by the Americans, when it camped for the night to come up. That afternoon a portion of the Texas cavalry occupied a recent lodgment near the Plaza. While drawing water at one of the wells, which at first was supposed to be poisoned, a dispute arose between two young men named Barclay and Rogers. At sundown, to Roger's surprise, he received a challenge, written on a piece of dirty paper in lead pencil. Roger's had no paper to reply on, but told the bearer of his friends challenge that he had no intention of wounding the feelings of his old messmate, and begged he would accept his verbal explanation as an apology, which he did, and expressed his full satisfaction and his pleasure at terminating the difficulty so very happily.

The next day, however, Rogers was astonished at receiving another communication from an officer in the artillery, stating that Roger's reply was not satisfactory to Mr. Barclay, and demanding a written apology. Rogers was on duty that day, but as soon as relieved he mounted his horse, and rode to the tent of an infantry friend to consult him and to ask his assistance in the affair. Roger's related his story and told his friends that after what had passed he never could consent to give a written apology. "I fear then," said his friend, "a fight cannot be avoided; but wait here a moment, and I will ride over and see your adversary's second, Lieutenant R——, the artillery officer."

After the lapse of an hour Roger's friend returned and said: "Well, I fear there is no other alternative, I can do nothing, and [illegible] for you that from the [illegible] I can act for you [illegible] to fall on [illegible] will be able [illegible]

[illegible] the cave [illegible]

[illegible] Six thousand years ago, [illegible]

Six thousand years ago! how long [illegible]

Life's sparkling fountains play [illegible]

While earth grows old, as time runs on,

Is still unbroken [illegible]

Six thousand years! How short the span,

When compared with our [illegible]

Stretches the broad [illegible] land

Untravelled yet by man,

While backward in the dark unknown,

Where spirit bendeth low,

To listen to the cold, drear tones

Of years and years ago.

[illegible] for the contin[illegible] lately grown fainter and [illegible] the moon poured down a flo[illegible] light on the scene as the appro[illegible] drew near. Rogers mounted [illegible] passed outside the lines and [illegible] appointed spot. His adversary [illegible] the Lieutenant, were [illegible] Dismounting, [illegible] their shoulders approached [illegible] were whispered in the ear of Mind[illegible] and bowed [illegible] with [illegible]

The distance was stepped off and the parties were placed at their places. It was a lovely night, the moonbeams danced on the rippling waters, and as they [illegible] led on their way, their sweet murmur [illegible] heard, deeply impressive with the solemn[illegible] of the hour. There was a solemn beauty about the surrounding scene which seemed to call forth the noblest, the most philanthropic feelings of man. A sentiment of sorrow and regret seemed to prevail that the meeting had taken place—but it was then too late. The barrels of their weapons glistened in the silver light, and in a few moments they were to risk the chance of being hurried into eternity, while one gave the other for received from him, satisfaction for his wounded honor. They had been placed at the present, when the Lieutenant walking off at a distance midway between them, said, "Gentlemen, are you ready?" "Yes," was the response of both. At the next word, which each thought was big with the fate of one or both of them, to their surprise the voice of Lieutenant R— was heard ringing on the air: "Advance fifteen paces." They accordingly advanced until they met. "Shake hands," said the Lieutenant, in a most imperious tone. The combatants stood bewildered, half doubting, but mechanically extending their hands one to the other. "Now," said Lieutenant R—, "I declare this difficulty honorably settled, and whoever dares to question it, must be responsible to me. Gentlemen, your [illegible] friends; mount your horses." The two parties again grasped each other's hand, and with a look of gratitude [illegible] their mutual friend mounted and rode [illegible] him to his tent. The night ended [illegible] scene of joy and revelry, which twined [illegible] hearts together forever. The memory [illegible] Lieutenant R— who shortly after fell at Monterey, and his noble [illegible] are cherished in a thousand [illegible] this gallant American officer [illegible] that no man was his superior [illegible] law among his friends and which [illegible] question.

[illegible] TOWN [illegible]

[illegible]