REGINALD C. VANDERBILT

MRS. VANDERBILT

Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt has filed suit for divorce in Newport, R. I., alleging desertion for the last five years. Newport society understands that Mr. Vanderbilt will not contest the action and that no alimony will be asked. Mrs. Vanderbilt asks custody of their only child, Cathleen, now in her sixteenth year. Mr. Vanderbilt, youngest son of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt, inherited a share of his father's estate estimated at $10,000,000. Later he received $5,000,000 by the will of his brother, Alfred Gwyne Vanderbilt, who perished on the Lusitania. Mrs. Vanderbilt was Miss Cathleen Gebhard Neilson, daughter of Mrs. Frederick H. DAYLIGHT SAVING FOR STEELTON

Petitions to Be Signed Asking Council to Adopt Plan

Steelton is to fall in line with the other progressive communities of the State if the plans of a large number of citizens will go through. The extra hour of daylight during the summer months has become almost a necessity to practically all of the citizens of the borough. Tennis and baseball enthusiasts, home gardeners, motorists and workmen all are advocating the continuance of the daylight plan for the borough.

Petitions will be circulated to be signed by all who are in favor of the plan. The petitions are to be sent to the Borough Council asking them to fall in line with other communities in giving the residents the extra hour of daylight during the five summer months. A similar ordinance is to be presented to the Harrisburg Council and so strong is the feeling in favor of it that there seems little possibility of its failing. The petitions to be signed will be placed in various stores and shops throughout the borough. Those in favor of the plan are invited to sign.

Enhaut to Have Big Automobile Parade

Arrangements are being completed for a big automobile parade to be held to-morrow afternoon at 5 o'clock in Enhaut. The parade is being planned by the Good Will Fire Company, of Enhaut, and will be the initial feature of a series of wonderful doings to-morrow evening and Monday evening. The Chambers Hill band has been engaged to furnish the music. The band will be in the parade and will participate in the festivities after the parade. The center of the stage after the parade will be the enginehouse of the fire company. Just what is going to happen does not seem to be known to many people. Asked what was to take place a member of the committee replied: "It is called a festival. But that does not say anything. Come and see."

Naturally where anything is kept even partially secret there is great curiosity, so a few youngsters acted as eavesdroppers on the meeting of the committee a few nights ago. They reported that they heard something in reference to candy and bedspreads, cigars and pillows, ice cream and fancywork. Such combinations can, of course, not be understood Whatever it is, it will be for the benefit of the fire company, which is trying to raise sufficient funds to buy motor-driven fire-fighting apparatus

Pennsylvania Prize Fighter Dies as Result of Injuries in Bout

By Associated Press.

Atlantic City, N. J., Aug. 29. — Frank Heifling, Wilkes-Barre, a prize fighter, died to-day as the result of injuries sustained in a prize fight last night. His opponent, K. O. Circus, Pittsburgh, was held without bail. Sam Lewis, the referee, was held in $1,000 bail.

Circus landed a right short hook which caught Heifling square on the jaw in the eighth round and felled him. Referee Lewis counted ten and the spectators thought Heifling had merely been knocked out. Heifling was carried to his corner by the seconds, who threw water on him to bring him around. He went into a spasm and then again lapsed into unconsciousness.

Physicians worked on Heifling for an hour at the clubhouse but failed to revive him. He was then taken to the city hospital. Dr. Charles B. Weinberg, who was at the club, stated that Heifling had collapsed from exhaustion, and the blow struck simultaneously. Heifling was leading the first six rounds.

Little Talks by Beatrice Fairfax

By Beatrice Fairfax

I think it was that genial old cynic Thackeray who said any woman, given a fair amount of opportunity, could marry any man she pleased. It must have been this remark that started such a far-reaching boom in propinquity.

But apparently propinquity — or nearness—has its exceptions and sometimes it reacts as an active poison to romance. This perhaps is true only of the man or woman who has such unpleasant habits that it amounts to a scourge, for the sensitive, to have them about. People who have not yet discovered that to preserve any of the illusions of civilization a certain amount of reticence must be observed.

My young correspondent tells me that she has taken a vow of perpetual celibacy, and that while she is employed in one of the Government departments in Washington she feels as if she were spending her life in a barber shop or a he-beauty parlor. Her letter, which is entirely too frank and unexpurgated to be given — except in portions — would be a very valuable document to young people whose home training has been neglected. This applies to young women as well as young men.

"A Chiel Amang Ye Takin' Notes"

The individual who has turned the life of this young "war worker" into dust, ashes and cinders is one of those dami-hemi-semi departmental chiefs that make up a goodly proportion of Washington's population.

This gentleman, according to the "Chief Takin' Notes," spends a certain amount of time writing reports, signing papers and receiving documents from messengers, and the rest of the time he devotes to intensive cultivation of his person.

He snips, prunes, picks, and polishes himself before his office force, with the joy of a department store demonstrator giving an exhibition. The force has tried staring, it has tried the averted eye, it has left the room, and one day when the gentleman attempted a minor surgical operation on his face with a pair of tweezers, one nervous young thing went off her head into hysterics. Still the chief goes on with his lopping, sniping and pruning.

"You would think," writes the desperate girl, that his various amputations would have some appreciable effect on his outline;' but no, like the crab, he seems to be able to reproduce his members by spontaneous growths."

Expects to Live and Die a Spinster

The girl confides in me that before a cruel fate shut her up in the Chief's official boudoir with his various toilet accessories, she fully expected to marry. That a vague hope of meeting Prince Charming played some part in her decision to come to Washington. But that this "constant currying in public" has been her "cure" for romance, and that she expects to live and die a spinster.

Then she indulges in some reflections regarding the Chief's antecedents and she concludes that probably he was a foundling and the matron neglected to tell him that a toothpick need not be kept in the mouth continually once the feeding bottle has been abandoned.

I am sure this girl felt a whole lot better after she wrote me that letter, and got the Chief — and his vanity box, as it were — "off her chest." It must have been an immense relief to write to an impersonal and unbiased confidant like me the daily irritation that was eating into her soul like so much acid.

And perhaps she may meet a man who has had an army or navy training and who would never dream of "currying himself in public" in consequence. Let us hope so, at any rate, and draw a moral from the Chief, his toothpick and his penknife.

I doubt if he is a foundling. Very probably he had a doting mother who never noticed her son's ugly little personal habits or realized they would be a handicap to him in life. One cannot think of a man with such disagreeable mannerisms occupying a genuinely important position. As Lord Chesterfield wrote to his son, a gentleman completes his toilet in private, before he leaves home. And the same rule holds good with the gentleman's feminine counterpart.

Powdering the Nose in Public

It may be amusing to see a young girl, if she is pretty, powder her nose in public. But it approaches farce comedy when the powderer is homely and middle-aged. And speaking of nose powdering, why don't they change their powder rags and puffs a little oftener if everyone is going to see it done?

At the theater I have seen women whip out a priceless gold vanity case and apply a powder puff that looked like a fragment of a diseased cat. If you must do it—and apparently nothing will break women of the habit—do have the puff or rag clean.

Women are intuitively more dainty than men, and I can't conceive of any woman past the stone age of her social development using a toothpick in public or chewing gum. And yet a girl wrote me a letter the other day, as amusing as it was pitiful, telling me she was a high school graduate and setting forth her list of accomplishments, and painfully surprised that none of her office friends invited her to their parties.

She said they were delightful girls and they seemed to have the nicest times imaginable, and yet they never invited her to join in any of their after office fun. New girls came into the concern and were invited to join the coterie, but she was always left out.

I turned the page and looked to see if the letter had a postscript, because the crux of any difficulty is usually concealed there, and sure enough it was — she chewed gum incessantly, publicly and privately. I advised her to chew in front of her hand-mirror for ten minutes and then decide if she looked attractive.

When young men and women fail to get on well socially or in business, let them take stock of their little personal habits and discover if these grate on their associates or not. Are they invited out, or do their friends pass them by, time and time again, and if so, what is the reason?

At all events, an excellent motto to adopt would be my bitter young friend's phrase, "No currying in public."

Sure, Semaphores Stop the Traffic, but Not Always in Jig Time

Traffic Cop Rineer, who directs traffic at Second and Walnut streets, this morning was stricken with an exceeding fear when he came to work. He was afraid he would again have to revert to the old calisthentics to properly direct traffic.

His semaphore was not in its accustomed place. Last evening, it had been left standing at the northeast corner of Second and Walnut streets. For some time Rineer was at a loss to understand the situation, but after several minutes casual search, he spied the missing semaphore lying in the street, more than fifty feet from where it had been life. It later developed that the semaphore had been struck by a wogan, dragged north in Second street, and left lying in the street with several of the glasses broken.
