Scientific Discussions by Garrett P. Serviss

I am distressed over the fate that is permitted, through human neglect, to fall upon some noble specimens of that distinctively American tree, the hickory, which I see before my window here in Northern New York. They belong to the genuine shell-bark variety. Their large, shapely tops rise eighty feet above the ground, and are loaded with nuts, many of which, however, bitten in the heart by larvae, are falling, immature and shrivelled.

Sprinkled over the massed foliage of the great trees, gleaming like nebulous films when seen from below against the sky, are many huge webs, the homespun abodes of innumerable dark-skinned caterpillars, whose hordes stream unmolested up and down, preparing greater ravages. From some of the branches the dark green leaves are nearly all stripped off; many of the twigs are dead or dying. It is a horrible fate for such stately beings to encounter, in their own home land, before the eyes of those who might easily save them!

This hurts me, for as a boy I grew up in a hickory country. There was one towering "shellbark" a hundred feet tall, the highest thing for miles around except the hills, and, besides that a "line tree," i. e., a surveyor's mark, and therefore secure for life against the ax, and enjoying a kind of reverence because of the peculiar sanctity that the law of metes and bounds bestowed upon it, whose memory is as deeply rooted in me as that of the old house, and is more pathetic, for the house still stands, though changed; but the tree has fallen in its age, and new generations of squirrels know not even where it stood. Yet I remember that in the Autumn the nuts used to rattle down as thick as hail.

That was in the Mohawk country, and a boy, in my time, was sure to hear all about the wonderful bows that the Indians made of hickory wood, and to try his own hand at that art, not difficult if you were satisfied with a jack-knife finish. Hickory bows that I made sometimes caused great excitement among squirrels and chipmunks—but I cannot say great slaughter.

Hickory wood is not only admirably elastic, but it is also exceedingly strong and "tough," or tenacious. It makes the best ax handles in the world. It is fine for musket stocks, ox-bows, axle-trees, tool-handles of all kinds, buggy wheels, whipstocks, heavy wagon wheels, wagon tongues, thills, rustic chairs, and parlor chairs for heavyweights. It is heavy as well as strong and elastic, and I'd sooner trust my life to the aid and protection of a stout hickory walking stick than to one made of any other wood.

When I think of the splendid qualities of hickory I rejoice that it is a native American tree, one that was here before we white men came, one whose name, as we have it, is a shortened form of that given to it by the red men, viz: "pohickory." The hickory in its straightness, its tallness, its shapeliness, its strength, its tenacity and elasticity, its ability to adapt itself equally to life in the woods or in the open, an athlete among trees, inspiring confidence by its looks, is an excellent type of the American character. When they called General Jackson "Old Hickory" they did justice to both the tree and the man.

Hickory wood is now too scarce to be burned, but in the old days when it was abundant, it made the most splendid of chimney fires. The flame is exceedingly brilliant and cheerful and the heat radiated from it is very penetrating. On a howling winter's night, with the sky thick with snowflakes, when the foxes might be shivering in the depths of their holes, a pile of blazing hickory logs crackling on the old andirons turned the house into an illuminated palace of comforts unknown to kings.

The nuts of the "shell-bark," Carya alba, are the best eating of all the varieties furnished by the Carya gens, except, it may be, the pecans of the west, which are borne by the Carya olvaeformis. To crack them on a cold night, before a fire fed by their own blood, so to speak, was a matchless joy, provided that the human companionship was right.

Mrs. McSparrin Named Pomona of National Grange

Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov. 19.—That there are too many profits between producer and consumer, is the contention of the report of the special committee on co-operative buying and marketing read late yesterday afternoon at the convention of the National Grange. The report was adopted.

H. J. Lowell, of Fredonia, N. Y., newly-elected master of the National Grange, was secretary of the committee making the report which reviewed the work of the grange and other form organizations in establishing co-operative buying and selling and commanded the plan in general.

Additional officers were elected, among them being Pomona, Mrs. J. A. McSparrin, Furniss, Pa.

Mayor's Plan For Big Municipal Market of Army Foods Progressing

Mayor Daniel L. Keister to-day gave further consideration to plans for establishing a permanent store for the sale of army supplies. He has been offered several big rooms on good locations. As soon as he has found a room he will take up the organization of the sales force and committee. The Mayor said to-day:

"It is not a question of being able to get the goods. They will be forthcoming as soon as we can find a suitable place to put the food and supplies on sale. It has been suggested that the sales be conducted after 6 p. m. This would give us an opportunity to get help. However, if I can get the volunteers my plan is to open a municipal store and have it run the same as any other store. I realize that this is going to be an additional expense, but the prices quoted are low, and the Government fixes a maximum that may be added, which would still give the people bargains."

England and France Considering Action

London, Nov. 19.—Great Britain and France are considering whether they are not compelled to proceed with the carrying out of the German Peace Treaty and the operation of the League of Nations independently of the United States, pending the decision of the American government on its course.

It is pointed out that matters are continually arising under the Treaty which need immediate attention, such as the operation of the various plebescite commissions, and it is considered that because of this fact it is no longer possible to delay making the pact operative.

The opinion strongly prevails here that Great Britain will not accept any reservations made by the United States which would necessitate the negotiation of a new Treaty, as the British government, it is declared, has every present intention of abiding by the decisions of the Paris Conference.

The belief still exists in this capital that the American government will ultimately take its place with the Allies. Meanwhile there appears to be a possibility that Great Britain and the others will proceed without the United States.

Officials of the foreign office decline to believe the various reports, and say it will be time enough to announce France's official attitude, if rejection or withdrawal of the Treaty becomes an accomplished fact.

SENATE IN LINE FOR FINAL VOTE

Democrats to insure its defeat had agreed to vote against the Lodge resolution.

No compromise plan was drafted by the Democrats but it was suggested that after the prospective defeat of the Lodge reservation, a committee of Democrats would be appointed to confer with the Republicans to that end.

The way to compromise was opened by the group of mild reservation Republicans, who served notice on the Republican and Democratic leaders that they would not put up the bars entirely to modification of the committee reservations, but would stand out against and defeat the administration's parliamentary program.

With this final announcement of how their deciding strength would be used in the closing stages of the Treaty contest, the mild reservationists retired to the back ground. The result was that Republican Leader Lodge and Democratic Leader Hitchcock faced each other and laid all their cards on the table.

To Final Decision

The conference between the two leaders brought no final decision as to the language of a compromise ratification, but it did develop an agreement that the Democrats would have the opportunity for which they have fought to secure a show down vote on the question of unreserved ratification. This veto, Mr. Lodge said would be permitted before the rollcall of the committee resolution.

The Senate late yesterday voted down a reservation by Senator Johnson, Republican, California, relating to voting equality in the League of Nations. It was offered as a substitute for a proposal by Senator McCumber.

The vote was 46 to 43.

Senators Kirby, Reed, Shields, Phelan and Walsh, of Massachusetts, Democrats, voted for it, while Senators Colt, Edge, Hale, Kellogg, Keyes, Lenrott, McCumber, McNary, Nelson and Sterling, Republicans, opposed it.

A reservation by Senator Lenroot, Republican, Wisconsin, relative to voting equality in the League of Nations, was substituted in the Senate to-day for one on the same subject by Senator McCumber, Republican, North Dakota. The vote was taken to forecast adoption of the Lenroot reservation.

On the question of adopting the Lenroot substitute the vote was 55 to 38.

A reservation by Senator Phelan, Democrat, California (to stipulate that the Treaty must be interpreted "in harmony with the fourteen points" was defeated 79 to 12, with Senators Borah, Brandegee, France, Gronna, John
