PITTSBURGH:

FRIDAY MORNING, MAY 17, 1861.

RESTORATION OF VIRGINIA.

The late Convention of Virginia, which met at Richmond, passed an ordinance of secession, with a provision for its submission to a vote of the people, for ratification or rejection, on the 23d of May. A day or two afterwards, an additional ordinance or resolution was passed by the same body, attaching Virginia to the new Southern Confederacy under President Davis. Simultaneously with these acts of the Convention, the Governor of the State sent an armed force to take possession of the United States property at Harper's Ferry, thus putting the State in an attitude of hostility towards the Federal Government, and as far as he possibly could do it, recognizing the secession of the State as an accomplished fact, without waiting for the vote of the people, which, it is perfectly plain, was never intended to be anything more than an empty form.

All this was the work of a crew of traitors in Eastern Virginia, who effected their objects not so much by the force of numbers as by that of violence and intimidation. The effect has been to involve all the constituted authorities of the State in the crime of treason—not treason to be proved in a court of justice, but open and avowed. Therefore, as matters now stand, either Virginia is out of the Union, or her government is a nullity—she has no government if she is still to be regarded as a member of the Union, and one must be improvised in some way. Her constitution and laws remain unimpaired, but there are no longer any legitimate agents to execute them. The existing necessity now is that these be provided.

The majority of the people of Western Virginia are opposed to this treasonable movement; but they have no hope of being able to arrest it by the vote of the people on the 23d, for in the greater part of the State there will be neither freedom nor fairness. Their only alternative, therefore, is to fall back upon their inherent rights, and resist the usurpation as best they can. It was proposed in the late Convention of Wheeling to meet secession by secession; so that if the eastern portion of the State should secede from the Union, the West should remain by seceding from the State. This plan would do very well, provided the general government should resolve to acquiesce in any secession at all; but as that is not intended—as neither Virginia nor any other State is to be permitted to go out—there are grave and insurmountable objections to a division of the State. It would be a direct violation of the Constitution, which in express terms forbids such division. It would be a recognition of secession; for were the government to recognize a part of Virginia as a State, it would be a virtual abandonment of the remainder, and, with that remainder, of all the States that have seceded. It matters not what local, geographical or social arguments may be urged in favor of a division of Virginia, this is not the time to do it.

The existing state of things is this: The present struggle is not for a reconstruction of the Union, for the fact that it has been dissolved is not acknowledged, nor is it going to be acknowledged. The ordinances of secession are only regarded as unlawful acts, and the government of the Confederate States as an unlawful combination—formidable to be sure—but nothing more. A recognition on the part of the Federal Government of a new State, formed out of a part of Virginia, would necessarily change the whole aspect of the question, and require it to regard the rebels as foreign enemies instead of domestic traitors.

But, as we have already remarked, Virginia has at present no government which the Nation can recognize, because that which was its government is now in open and flagrant war with the supreme authority of the Nation. There is a kind of interregnum—a state of things which not only warrants, but requires the loyal people of the State to initiate a new government—provisional and partial at first, both in respect to function and territory, but quite competent to protect the people, and to call upon the President to aid it to quelling domestic insurrection. We are very glad to observe that this course is the one likely to be adopted. The Union does not need to be reconstructed, but it is necessary to reconstruct the government of Virginia, and also of all the seceded States. An army can find plenty of materials with which to form a nucleus to any of them. It will not be necessary for the President or Congress to impose a government upon them; for they will be very glad to do the work themselves.

WHAT KIND OF RECOGNITION?

From the brief and not very clear report prepared for the telegraph, of Lord John Russell's remarks in Parliament, when he referred to the blockade of the Southern ports and other matters pertaining to the great question of the day, (for the American question is now recognized as such in Great Britain) it is not certain what course will be determined on by that Government, in regard to privateering under Mr. Jeff Davis's letters of marque.

So far as the report goes, it would appear that the British Government will not instruct their officers to treat the Southern privateers as pirates, but recognize them as the ships of a belligerent power! Ah, Lord John! perhaps second thoughts will be better than first ones—which in all candor must be viewed as very crude indeed!

What! can belligerent rights be constantly recognized as belonging to any but a recognized power?—to a legitimately constituted government, not a mere insurgent and rebellious faction, usurping the functions of a legitimate government?

A New Development.

It is reported that the drawings of a machine for making musket balls, in use in the Watervliet Arsenal, New York, were some time since handed over to an experienced workman in Troy, to enable him to make a similar machine on an order of an individual in New York. Upon inquiry of Maj. Rosencrantz, he justified his own conduct in the matter by saying that he delivered the model and drawings upon the order of the Secretary of War, Mr. Floyd. The mechanic was at once arrested and the machine seized. It has since been completed and is now in possession of the Government. There are but two of the machines in the United States, and they are capable of producing forty thousand musket balls each, every twenty-four hours.

Scientific Aid in Defence of the Union.

The Government has made an arrangement to use the Calcium light at Fortress Monroe, and the apparatus will be set up on the parapets in a few days. This famous light possesses extraordinary illuminating powers. One of the reflectors, which was once placed on the Latting Observatory, cast a distinct shadow at Tarrytown, thirty miles distant. By the aid of this light the garrison at Fortress Monroe will be able to detect any vessel that may attempt to pass the fortress at night, and give its artillery a distinct object on which to be effective, no matter how great the surrounding darkness.

How they are Abolishing Slavery.—The Richmond "Examiner" says that Richmond contains, at this moment, not less than five thousand unemployed negroes. The tobacco factories are closed, or working short force. All the usual occupations of manual labor are at a stand-still. Slaves walk the streets, whose masters can find work neither for him nor for nothing. It would be a blessing to the whole idle and non-combatant population to give it employment on the fortifications of Richmond.

You may not have heard of a pet scheme of the Emperor of the French, which is to establish a bimonthly line of steamers between St. Nazaire and New York. The subsidy to the Company, who are connected with the Credit Mobilier, is very large. The agents are now in London trying to interest English capital; but it is probable that their scheme is more for their moral support, than need of the money.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

[Correspondence of the Pittsburgh Gazette.]

WASHINGTON CITY, May 15, 1861.

It is both interesting and curious to witness the different specimens of fighting material the President's proclamation has brought into the field. I was first given to reflection upon this subject some three or four weeks ago, at Gen. Jim Lane's rooms, at Willard's, upon the occasion of a meeting there of the "Frontier Guards," of which the redoubtable Lane is captain. I found gathered there some of the principal actors in the Kansas war—men of bold, reckless impulses, and of great courage and indomitable will; men who were ready for adventure of every description, and who were at all times willing to peril their lives in behalf of the cause they had espoused. Next came the hardy sons of Massachusetts, worthy descendants of the patriots who fell at Lexington, Concord and Bunker Hill; then came the glorious "Seventh," representing New York upper-tendom, a regiment embracing more young men of education, travel and wealth than any other ever formed on this continent; then followed the staunch and gallant brigade from the land of Roger Sherman; then came the Pennsylvania "Fifth," a rather "hard looking set," at first, to be sure, but now acknowledged by officers in the regular service to "be the best fighting material on the ground;" Ellsworth's "fast Zouaves" followed soon after, representing the bravest and finest specimen of men, physically, in the world, perhaps; New Jersey came next, with her "three thousand," all in "blue." Yesterday morning, the Connecticut troops—tall, powerful fellows, armed and equipped to perfection—made their appearance in regimental array, upon Pennsylvania Avenue; and to-day the capacious Cahawba disgorged another magnificent regiment among us, from this State, each man armed with a Minie rifle, topped with the sword bayonet; and as I now write, they are grandly marching up the Avenue, on the way to their camping ground, presenting a somewhat novel appearance, from the fact that every man wears a "Havelock" over his cap. In a few days I supposed we shall have among us the descendants of Allen and Starks—noble representatives of the patriotic grandsires who so bravely fought at Bennington and Crown Point—the "Green Mountain Boys!" they who so nobly stood by and sustained their brave leader when he demanded Ticonderoga's surrender "in the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress!"

A great deal is being said here in condemnation of the policy of the Administration concerning the hundreds of secessionists who are constantly going and coming between the city and Alexandria. For the sake of the public peace, demonstrations against them are seldom made by the loyal citizens, but it is considered unfair and impolitic that people living in Virginia, well known to entertain treasonable sentiments, should be allowed the run of the town, and to come and go unmolested of any, when a loyal citizen of Washington enters the domain of Virginia at the peril of his life. Is this city ever to be put under martial law? Are these skulking secession spies to prowl about the city until they have poisoned a regiment or two, or committed some other infernal deed?

Preparations are already being made for the extra session. The conclusion at which some have arrived, respecting various recommendations Mr. Lincoln intends to make in his message, looking to certain amendments to the Constitution respecting slavery, with a view to changing the present aspect of affairs, is entirely illusory. No such recommendations will be made; and even if they were, Congress would peremptorily refuse to act upon them. The American Congress has done with slavery forever, as far as any legislation upon the subject is concerned, unless it be to indemnify the loyalists in Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee and Missouri for any losses they may have sustained during the war, from the seizure and confiscation of their slave property by the rebels that will undoubtedly ensue. It seems quite likely that the session will be of but a very few days duration, as, under the rather novel circumstances which will attend the outing, not much time will be wasted in useless debate and angry contentions. But, should discord ensue, the booming of cannon along the Potomac will restore good feeling and united action in sustaining a vigorous policy.

So the Massachusetts "Sixth" have at last accomplished the darling object of their longing; they have "marched through Baltimore;" and not only marched through it, but captured it! How galling this act of "aggression" must be to such scoundrels as ex-Governor Lowe, S. Teackle Wallis, and the balance of the "Safety Committee!" A gentleman who was in Baltimore last evening reports that he saw several of the Massachusetts troops perambulating the streets there, and that no disposition whatever was manifested to molest them. Major Anderson, Captain Lyon, and General Butler—these are now the nation's heroes! The first gloriously defends a half starved garrison of seventy men against a cowardly attack made by seven thousand. The second captures a regiment of traitors, and thus virtually disarms the infamous secession cause in one of the slave States. The third conquers and completely subdues, at least for the time being, a populous city in the enemy's country, nine-tenths of whose citizens sympathize with the South.

Red Brazilian is becoming quite a lion here among a certain class. He rides up and down Pennsylvania Avenue at a furious rate, dressed in an embroidered red shirt and white cloth cap. At his side dangles a rapier of immense length, and the handle of an enormous bowie-knife of the "Potter-Pryor" pattern occasionally reveals itself. He paid a flying visit to Alexandria to-day, on horse-back, first taking the precaution to affix a secession badge to his breast. After some time spent in making observations as to the condition of affairs there, he commenced the delivery of a secession speech to a curious crowd of men, women and children, who were attracted by the grotesque appearance of the orator; but no sooner had he proceeded in bringing out the first burst of applause by his abuse of Lincoln and praise of "Jeff," than he indignantly tore from his breast the secession badge and buried it in the faces of his auditors. He then unfurled a small silk flag bearing the glorious stars and stripes, and proudly and defiantly waving it over his head, he drew his rapier and dashed away at full speed, holding his horse' bridle with his teeth. F. A. S.

Both Sides Bold.

Certain leading Union men in Kentucky appear to have fallen into a trap in consenting to recommend the arming of the State, while under its present rebel authorities. It is easy to see that all the benefit of this bargain will inure to the disunionists, by virtue of the certain law of revolution, which always gives the advantage to the extreme party.

With the State in the hands of a Military Commission, presided over by Governor Magoffin, there can be but little doubt that the Unionists of Kentucky will have been guilty of taxing themselves to put arms in the hands of their enemies.

That the secession of Kentucky will involve the immediate destruction of slavery in that State even the disunionists themselves freely admit. This result, with keen foresight, is now clearly announced by the anti secession newspapers in that State.

The Louisville "Journal," in a recent editorial on the subject, says:

"The passage by the Legislature of a law of unconditional emancipation, within three months, of all such slaves as should accept the boon of freedom, would not extirpate slavery from our soil either more utterly or more speedily than the going of Kentucky into the Southern Confederacy would produce that result. Many even of our secessionists feel this great truth in spite of themselves. We know of scores, we have heard of hundreds, of ardent secessionists in Kentucky, who, in expectation of her secession, have sent off or are making arrangements to send or take off their slaves into the Cotton States as the only hope of not losing them."

Thus, in Kentucky, as in disrupted Virginia, slavery is wounded in the house of its friends, and receives its death-blow from the hands of men who would murder Liberty in its defense. Of all the marvels of history, there is none that equals this, and no more signal vindication of the ways of God in man.—[N. Y. Sun.

Patriotic Bankers.

The banks of Providence, Rhode Island, have subscribed $500,000 as a war loan to the government. The movement is announced in the following letter, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury:

PROVIDENCE, May, 11, 1861.—Dear Sir: The undersigned, a committee appointed by the banking institutions of this city to ascertain what amount of the new United States loan can be taken here, and to correspond with the Secretary of the Treasury and others in regard to the same, take great pleasure in informing you that the banks and other institutions of this city propose to loan to the government the sum of five hundred thousand dollars, when the convertible, treasury notes having two years to run, with interest semi-annually, are offered by you; and we hand you at foot the names, and capital of the banks and institutions that propose to participate in the loan. The undersigned embrace this opportunity to express to you, and through you to President Lincoln, their great satisfaction at the prompt manner in which the country has been placed in a position to assert its majesty and maintain its integrity, and to assure you that in saying this we express the unanimous sentiment of the citizens of this city and state.

With sentiments of high regard, we remain, very truly, your obedient servants, Josiah, Obadiah, Amos D. Smith, Robert H. Ives, Tully D. Bowen, Henry C. Cranston, Committee.

Honorable Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, Washington.

Among the passengers who arrived by the steamship Arago, from Havre, were Jerome Bonaparte, of Baltimore, Capt. S. W. Abert, of the United States army, Dr. Woodward, of the United States navy, and the families of Mr. Dallas, late American Minister in England, and of Mr. Faulkner, late American Minister in France. A large company of Roman Catholic priests and Sisters of Mercy were also among the Arago's passengers. The total number of passengers on board the steamer was 337.
