PITTSBURGH: THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 20.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT NEWS.

WASHINGTON, June 17, 1861.

An Alarm—A Night March—and Results.

Last night there was a general disposition among our men, on both sides of the Potomac, to believe that the enemy were approaching in force. In Washington, a late alarm of fire, the frequent tramp of small bodies of troops, marching about the streets, and the rumbling of army wagons during the whole night, the discharge of several musketoes near the camp of the New York 12th, coupled with the well known fact that this regiment was under arms through the night, created much alarm among the timid. Not a few persons rushed from their dwellings, and insisted that the enemy were marching on the city by the Leesburg turnpike, and that the light in the direction of Georgetown was a signal agreed upon by the rebels in Virginia, who were crossing the chain bridge to cooperate with the Leesburg army, while others maintained that "Jeff," at the head of 20,000 man, was within six miles of Alexandria.

At Alexandria a like belief prevailed. The Zouaves, Massachusetts Fifth, and other regiments were on the alert, ready to lead to the defense of the works. The 1st Michigan Regiment occupied the redoubt all night. The 69th, who returned to-day, as we telegraphed they would do, and are within their intrenchments, went but a short distance before they discovered it was a false alarm, which was depriving them of their night's rest.

These companies, however, proceeded about 9 miles, and captured seven Secessionists, some of whom were caught in the act of blowing up a bridge, whom they brought home with them. They also brought in four secession flags, and a number of arms. Having learned that a party of rebels were assembled at Falls Church, Lieut. Bagley, in command of the advance picket guard, made a descent upon the premises, and captured two, three of the party making their escape by leaping from the windows, and hiding in the woods. Six more were captured by a regiment on its return home.

The Rebels at Manassas.

It was reported in Washington yesterday, by a person just arrived from Manassas Junction, that this point is by no means as tenable as was supposed, and that the evacuation of it by the rebel troops is not more unaccountable than their retreat from Harper's Ferry. Gen. Scott, it is said, knew very well how affairs stood at that point, and he has arranged his plans to treat the Junction precisely as he treated the Ferry. Generals Lee and Beauregard are said to be at loggerheads concerning their policy; Lee being for active measures of aggression, and Beauregard opposed to them—a view in which he is sustained by Mr. Davis. Beauregard has therefore superseded Gen. Lee in command of the department of Alexandria.

The troops at Manassas he estimates at 22,000. All the Harper's Ferry force, except the rear guard, which was said to be 1500 strong, had arrived. The rear-guard had retreated as far as Winchester. Messrs. Miles and Preston are among Beauregard's aids. The intrenchments at Manassas are very strong. The condition of the rebels there is as bad as heretofore represented. They expect an attack from the Federal forces here on or before Thursday, and swear that they will repulse them with great slaughter, and drive them across the Potomac. They do not say what they will do in case no attack is made upon them from this direction.

An Advance Movement.

It is reported that the Aqueduct Brigade, consisting of the Thirteenth Volunteers, and Twenty-Eighth and Sixty-Ninth, under command of Col. Hunter, will, in a day or two, make Fairfax Court-House their Head-quarters. The telegraph wires are to be extended from Georgetown across the Aqueduct Bridge to Fort Corcoran. The sixteen 64-pounder Columbiads will all be in position on Fort Corcoran by to-morrow night. When the Sixty-Ninth marched out of their intrenchments yesterday, it was to the music of the "Star Spangled Banner," chorussed by the entire regiment. The hills of Old Virginia never before echoed the grand old song from more willing voices. Several regiments of the enemy from Manassas have reached Fairfax Court-House, and are throwing up intrenchments and enlarging their line of operations.

The rebels are afraid to continue their retreat for fear of desertions, having had the greatest difficulty in keeping the Harper's Ferry troops together.

Manassas may be taken in the rear. The enemy are afraid of that, and are endeavoring to guard against it. It is probable that they will be still obliged to retreat.

Everything is in the best condition for an advance to Richmond, for which the preparations were making. The approach of Gens. Patterson and McClellan's columns, and the concentration of troops from the East would seem to foretell this. Army officers prophesy that the forward movement hence, southerly and from Fortress Monroe toward Richmond, will begin within a fortnight, and that, when once begun, it will not halt until the Rebel Capital is taken. It is believed that the capture will be made before the day fixed for the meeting of the Davis Congress.

A Trap.

The Government has received information that the rebels have set a trap in a piece of woods, about 1 mile from Alexandria, and in the direction of Fairfax Court House, into which they expect to draw the unsuspecting Federal troops. Several small batteries have been erected by them on the outskirts of the woodland, and a pretence is making of throwing up intrenchments. Here they propose to array their forces at no distant day, and press forward their pickets until a collision ensues. This they presume will have the effect of luring the main field a large Federal force, before which the insurgents design to retreat, along a lane which has been cut through the woods. On both sides of this lane, which is about fifteen feet wide, have been constructed a number of masked batteries, which are to open their fire in every direction when the Federal troops have penetrated the forest so far as to render a retreat impossible.

The scout who brings this intelligence also states that a number of Indians, dressed in their war costumes, supposed to belong to the savages who volunteered from North Carolina, and who were but recently in Richmond, were seen lurking about the vicinity. It is thought that they will help the rebels, lying in ambush and awaiting, tomahawk and scalping knife in hand, the approach of the Federal forces through the lane, to punish of the retreating traitors. But Great Bethel has not been lured through in vain. We shall not be likely immediately to fall into a similar trap, at least with our eyes open.

Bluntnessments about the Departments.

The statements relative to the retention of rebels in the Treasury Department, says the correspondent of the New York Times, are sheer fabrications, and of course do great injustice to Secretary Chase. The oath of allegiance was as promptly administered to the employees in that Department as in either of the other Departments, and as generally subscribed by the clerks as by any of the Government employees. Nor is it true that Secretary Chase retains men in office who are known to entertain secession sentiments. I know that any fair evidence that a man sympathizes with the rebels would ensure his dismissal before the sun went down. In the case of the Sixth Auditor's office, and the stampede of secessionists from there when the oath of allegiance was administered, and about which so much has been said, the facts were that the names of every one of those who refused to take the oath were registered for dismissal as fast as competent persons could be found to take their places. The three clerks well know, and they did but anticipate by a few days the decision of the Secretary. Nor is it true that Mr. Chase is not giving to the Republicans a fair share of the patronage of his Department. It is no easy thing to find persons fitted for the discharge of duties connected with the Treasury, and it is not proper to make rapid changes in the different bureaus; but Mr. Chase is doing all, in this direction, that an honest regard for the interests of the Government will justify.

To Applicants for Office.

The War Department is in the constant receipt of applications for positions in the army, and especially in the ten new regiments ordered. It is hardly necessary to state that there are no more vacancies. They have all been filled, both in the regular army and in the new additions. Applicants will save themselves a great deal of trouble and anxiety by at once abandoning all intentions of making further applications, to say nothing of relieving the department of an immense burden. Applications are received by the hundreds every day, and are simply laid away in the desks, where they will remain forever. It appears that about nine thousand applications have been made for lieutenancies, and just about one-eighteenth of this number have been appointed. This statement ought to satisfy the thousands applying for office, and induce them to desist, as I make it by authority.

Return of a Fugitive Slave.

A slave woman, belonging to John Little, ran away, and got into one of the Ohio Regiments. She was demanded, and found dressed in male attire. Mr. Little discovered her, and she was at once retrieved to his custody. It is to be presumed that Little is loyal. The disposition of these cases is left to the discretion of the commanding officers, who usually bear in mind the general distinction between friends and enemies. The Administration has come to no conclusion in the matter, contrary to that contained in Secretary Cameron's excellent letter to Gen. Butler, published some weeks ago. The Journals which assert that Gen. Butler has been directed to receive no more contraband, are misinformed.

Arrest of a Traitor.

Wm. H. Craven, of Loudon County, Va., was arrested at Long Bridge and jailed. A neighbor of Craven whom he had advised to leave home on account of loyalty, was on duty at the bridge, recognized him; testified that he had declared that "no man in Loudon should be spared, unless he would fight for Secession;" that he was a constant companion of prominent armed rebels. A pass from Provost-Marshal Wallbridge, of Alexandria, by which he bound himself to be loyal to the United States under penalty of death, was found on him.

More Maryland Treason.

It is reported that the Legislature of Maryland will attempt to pass an act releasing the State of Virginia, from paying damages to the citizens of Maryland, who have sustained damage by the wanton destruction of the railroads and canals within the State of Maryland.

We are credibly informed by a Baltimorean, who was present, that on the evening after the election of Henry Maynard, Winter Davis, 1,500 friends of the successful candidate were gathered under the windows, when cheers were called for, from a balcony in Mr. Mayo's house for Jeff. Davis, the Baltimore boys at Harper's Ferry, the Maryland and the City Guards. The crowd responded heartily, and the band played "Dixie."

What the Rebels will do with Washington.

A well known Secessionist of this city was overheard to remark last night that it was not the intention of the rebels to permanently occupy Washington, in case that they capture it, but to blow up the public buildings, in which diabolical work they will be assisted by a number of domestic traitors, some of whom are, he says, employed in the departments, they seize the persons of the President and Gen. Scott, and evacuate the city, covering their retreat with cavalry and artillery.

About the Pirates.

Great interest is felt here concerning the probable disposition which will be made with the pirate crew of the Savannah. On the subject, the Cabinet is divided, though it is understood that Mr. Lincoln is of the opinion that less trouble, less bloodshed, and less expense will result to the country, if speedy execution be visited upon the crew; and if the official report bears out the statement gathered from the New York papers, they will undoubtedly be hung. The sentiment of the public seems universally in favor of such a course. Evening Post thus enunciates the new doctrine:

"The crime in which these fellows have been engaged and caught is one of peculiar atrocity, and there is a general expectation that they will be promptly hung for it as an example and terror to others. It is certain that any leniency in dealing with them will only encourage others; and that the best security of our ships and commerce in the future will be the immediate trial and execution of every pirate who is caught in the act. The laws of the United States are promptly on this point.

Are We a Military People?

The number of troops tendered by responsible parties to the President is 575,000 men. It is believed that it would be no difficult matter for the War Department to put an additional force of one hundred thousand men into the field, in thirty days from date of the order. It is gratifying to know that the New York difficulties are settled, and that the gallant Empire State will be permitted, despite a timid Governor and a reckless military board, to do her duty, and her whole duty, in the present trouble of the country.

The Berdan Rifle Corps.

Mr. Berdan's proposition for a mounted Rifle Corps has been accepted.

This new arm to the service is exceedingly popular here. The Secretary would have been willing to suspend the three years rule to oblige those who can not leave their homes more than a few months, but such must take the chances to be elected officers in the regiment so they can resign at pleasure.

The uniform will be heavy, dark blue flannel sack coat, metal buttons, and black fringe round the bottom, with black velvet collar, soft brown hat with small black feather.

The rifle is to be the well known "Target Rifle," cast steel barrel, swedged ball, false muzzle, and either globe or telescope sights.

Submarine Telegraph.

The Government, it is affirmed by those likely to know, is considering the propriety of immediately establishing submarine telegraphic communication between Point Lookout and Fortress Monroe. Scientific men say the undercurrent of the Chesapeake is not sufficiently strong to interfere with the project. A guard will be placed at Point Lookout to protect that station. This arrangement will shorten the time of communication between the War Office and Gen. Butler's garrison some twelve hours. Soundings have already been taken the whole distance.

The Tariff.

If the Morrill tariff is modified in any respect, at the extra session of Congress, it will be for the purpose of increasing the revenue. Secretary Chase is giving the matter his serious attention. No change will be made to please England and France, or the friends of those countries here. Secretary Chase believes that an American tariff should be adapted to the needs of the American people, and productive of benefit to them.

Miscellaneous.

Mr. Motley, the historian, arrived this morning with the Hon. A. H. Rice.

F. P. Wilson leaves Washington in a few days for Nebraska. He is sent out for the purpose of overhauling the accounts of the late officials of that Territory. Somehow it happens that J. Sterling Morton, the Secretary; Addison R. Gilmore, Receiver of the Land Office, and Wm. F. Weed and B. P. Rankin, Marshals, have all left their offices with balances against them on the Treasury books, for which they have not accounted.

Enos Lowe, late Reciever of the Iowa Land Office, is also a defaulter. It seems that while Mr. Buchanan was letting the Union go to pieces, his office holders were gathering up the fragments.

It would seem that the Cherokee matter is to come up again. We learn that the agents of this very fat job are in Washington already. They are
