Sacred, Just and Urgent.

Mr. Meagher, the Irish patriot and exile of '48, belongs to the Democratic party. That is, ever since he arrived in this country he has ranged himself on that side, and acted with that party in politics. As to thousands and ten thousands of his countrymen, as well as to the great majority of other Europeans who become citizens of the United States, to him doubtless it appeared that to be a Democrat was only to be, in the fullest sense, an American citizen. To him, doubtless, as to all who have found an asylum where the devotee of liberty, the exile proscribed by a jealous tyranny, and the poor victim of oppression, long unbelieve, who only flies because his poverty has become intolerable and oppression more inexorable, alike rest secure, fearing neither the proscriptions of an arbitrary tyrant, nor the exactions of a privileged oppressor,—to all such the very name of Democrat expresses everything they have loved, longed for, and sought to be,—everything most antagonistic to what they have learned both to hate and fear—the growth of prerogatives and class-privileges.

In a word, the name "Democrat" had represented to the ardent imagination of the more cultivated that fulness of devotion to the cause of Liberty which places a man in the vanguard of her army. Hence it never was a matter of much surprise that the mere prestige of the name had a first attractive power to draw the greater number of our foreign born citizens into the Democratic party.

But Mr. Meagher and the important body of citizens, of whom we regard him as a true and worthy representative, whatever their party alliances, have never for a moment been entangled by them when the cause of the Country appealed to them—when the Government, assailed by traitors, called on all loyal men to rally around the flag of the Union, to maintain the Constitution and the laws. No party names, no party ties availed to entangle them in that hour; no party lines divided them from loyal citizens of any party, even by the space of a moment's hesitation—but promptly, bravely, nobly they stood shoulder to shoulder with those so lately opposed to them in the arena of party politics—stood shoulder to shoulder with them in the field—to oppose the common enemy, the parricide traitors who had armed themselves long since to strike, and now aimed premeditated blows at their country's life. In the following words of noble eloquence and lofty patriotism did this generous scion of Irishman speak for himself and his countrymen, in a speech delivered at Jones' Wood, New York:

"Never, I repeat it, was there a cause more sacred, nor one more just, nor one more urgent. No cause more sacred, for it comprehends all that has been considered most desirable, most valuable, most ennobling to a political society and humanity at large. No cause more just, for it involves no scheme of conquest or subjugation, contemplates no disfranchisement of the citizen, excludes the idea of provisionalism and inferiority, aiming only at the restoration of franchises, powers and property, which were enjoyed by one people and one republic, and which, to be the means of happiness, fortune and renown to millions, must be exercised and held in common under one code of national laws, one flag, and one Executive. No cause more urgent, for intrigues, perfidies, armed legions, the hatred and cupidity of foreign courts assail it, and every reverse with which it is visited serves as a pretext for the desertion of the coward, the misrepresentation of the politician whose gains is his pocket, the preferred compromises of men who—in the name of peace, would capitulate to treason and accept dishonor, encouraging the designs of kings, and queens, and knaves, to whom this great Commonwealth, with all its wondrous acquisitions and inscalculable promise, has been, dull within the last few weeks, a source of envy, vexation, alarm and discomfiture, presenting, as it did, nobler scenes of activity and progress than their sinister souls could show—shelltering and advancing the thousands whom their pride and bayonets had swept beyond the sea, and like the mighty genius of the ocean confronting the ship of Vasco di Gama, uprising here to repel the intrusion which would establish on the seas and islands of the New World the crowned monopolies and disabling dominations of the Old. * * *

"The national government has suffered more from the patience, the leniency, the magnanimity it has practiced toward its enemies, and those who are in sympathy and league with them, than it has done from the courage, the science, the fierce energy of those who have taken the field against it, and victoriously shaken the banner of revolt and repudiation in its face."

In writing of the Geraldines, the historians of Ireland has extolled their patriotism by saying that, though of Norman race, they became more Irish than the Irish themselves. So, unless we are greatly deceived, will the historian of this Rebellion have occasion to write of our Irish and German fellow citizens, in no overstated admiration, —that they have been more unanimously American in their patriotism than even Americans themselves. How few indeed of them can be found so basely recreant to their country's cause, as not a few begotted partisans of high-vaunted native dignity, whose party sympathies first drivelled down to the degradation of complicity with slavery, and next to the lower depth of complicity with treason. To these base ingrates, unworthy the birth-right of citizenship which they have inherited, the first step of baseness was being false to their country's glorious traditions and the principles of liberty; after this, the next step was easy—when their friends became rebels, they became traitors. Thus they have disregarded all things sacred to the citizen, being traitors to their country, and all things sacred in a diviner sense to man as man, being traitors also to the cause of humanity, to the world's cherished hope of human progress, and, so to speak, to human nature itself.

Turning away, to avoid the pain of further loathing, from men so unworthy the name of American citizens, how cheering the hope inspiring words of Mr. Meagher, in which not only his own whole-souled patriotism speaks, but in which also there seems to be an echo of the heart tones of a universally felt sympathy—the spirit-voices of prayers that ascend to heaven from the good and generous of every land—in behalf of Freedom, that she may triumph over all her foes, and that the might of right alone may everywhere prevail.

The Cloven Foot.

If Democracy is pure anywhere in Pennsylvania it is in Venango county. It is there managed by those who are and long have been shinin lights in the party, and they generally manage to strike the key-note with which harmonize the differences of the party throughout the State. At the recent county meeting of the Democracy in that county, a series of resolutions was passed, among which is the one given below. J. K. Kerr was chairman of the committee on resolutions, and Arnold Plumer his second. Read the resolution carefully.

Resolved, That the recent destruction and suppression of Democratic papers, in this and neighboring States by lawless mobs, is calculated to arouse the indignation of every freeman, and is another evidence that the party in power is determined, if possible, to imitate the French Revolutionists by suppressing the freedom of the Press and of speech, and instituting a reign of terror.

How much that sounds like Unionism! How strongly it favors of devotion to the Government and a determination to support it! The freedom of speech and of the press which these men contend for is the freedom to denounce and overturn the Government—freedom to play traitor at will—freedom to give aid and comfort to the enemy without hindrance. They are all "Union" men, of course; they are as glib as can be in professing the utmost devotion to the Union; but they claim the right to give countenance to Rebels, and to show sympathy with traitors. While they profess to sustain the Government, they denounce it as inaugurating a reign of terror. It is idle to talk of such men being Union men. Such a resolution as we have quoted never came from a true Union heart. And yet these are the men with whom we are asked to join in "Union" movements, and forget party by giving them an equal share of the offices!

Latest from New Orleans.

A gentleman named Lyman Reynolds has just arrived in New York direct from New Orleans, which place he left on the 13th inst. He says:

Strong entrenchments are being erected all around the city, and on the road from New Orleans to Memphis sixteen cannon of heavy calibre are placed at various points. On ship Island, between Mobile and New Orleans, there are 5,000 men, and the place itself is well fortified. Every point of the city is mounted with cannon, and the rebels pride themselves on the impregnability of their position. Excitement and enthusiasm of the wildest sort reign around, and business of all sorts beyond that necessary to sustain life itself, is entirely suspended. The great question among all classes is the war. Nothing else takes up their attention, time and efforts. After the battle of Bull Run the Union men lost all hope of success of the federal arms, and are now entirely dejected. The proclamation of Jeff. Davis, compelling all that were not friends of the rebel cause to leave southern territory before the expiration of forty days, or be immediately arrested, is being availed of rapidly. Those who have the means to go are leaving, while those who have not, can but remain, and are forced by press of circumstances to enter the rebel army. No drafting has, as yet, taken place, but when Mr. Reynolds left the city rumors were current that this mode of providing food for powder would be shortly adopted. There are five or six foundries in New Orleans which are kept constantly employed, and are able to turn out about six heavy cannon per week. Small arms are very scarce, and it is almost impossible to provide muskets for drilling the soldiers. The Custom House is being used for the manufacture of arms.

Colored regiments under command of rebel officers are being organized in the city. The principal arm carried by these men, as well indeed of the whole army, is a sharp bowie knife, about eighteen inches in length. These colored men are drilled with much strictness every day, and, it is believed, will do good service in the war. The expression amongst all is "we will die or win." Drunkenness is fearfully prevalent among the soldiers, and vice of every description is rampant.

Newspapers are eking out a miserable existance, and poverty prevails generally among all classes. A free market for the poor, supported by voluntary contributions from the farmers, was in active operation but could not last long, because necessaries were not provided as abundantly as heretofore. Soldiers wives and children were suffering very much for want of food, as those men were induced to enlist under the promise that their relatives should be provided for during their absence. This was causing a good deal of complaint, as the soldier's most cheering incentive to fight is that if he falls in battle those whom he loves best on earth will be cared for. The rebel authorities, in order to get means to carry on their unjust warfare, also rob all who are possessed of the least Union sentiment of their property. One family who resided in the South for six years, and were stripped of all the wealth which they had amassed (which was considerable) and sent North with but twenty dollars each in their pockets. This is the way the chivalry of New Orleans treat our loyal citizens; but that city is now reaping the benefits of her perfidy. With her people starving, her commerce entirely ruined and the avenging arm of an insulted nation over her head, ready to strike a decisive blow, she is, no doubt, well and effectually punished. All the theatres were closed, and little public amusement was going on.

THE UNION MEN OF TEXAS.—If any doubt remains as to the terrorism beneath which the loyal sentiments of the South is smothered, it may be cured by reference to our California advices. From Texas, through wild tribes of Indians and over deserts, the Unionists are finding their way to the Pacific, telling tales, as they arrive, of fierce persecution behind them, and the tenacity with which their fellows, who still linger about their homes, cling to their old tradition and flag. This in Texas, the remotest of the revolted States. The patriots who are clamoring for peace at the expense of the Union may perhaps define the right and equity by which they consign those Southerners, whose loyalty so bitterly tried is found perfect, to the tyranny of self-elected anarchs and traitors. If no other motive impelled the Government to a relentless prosecution of the war, its obligation to Southern loyalists would be sufficient.

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—The steamer North Star has arrived from Aspinwall, bringing $950,000 in treasure from California. She reports having exchanged signals with the Northern Light on the evening of the 18th inst.
