The Rebel Defenses at Centreville and Manassas.

The letter of Bayard Taylor will give our readers a very fair and no doubt impartial description of the rebel defenses at Manassas. As a great interest is felt on this subject, we select the following conclusions arrived at by a correspondent of the New York World, who examined the whole ground:

CONCLUSIONS.

I. The rebel army has made the most successful, complete and handsome evacuation—the most secure and perfect retreat of which history furnishes an example. It has safely escaped, with its entire right and left wings, from Centreville, from the Upper and Lower Potomac, from every point threatened by our lines.

It has securely carried off its every gun, all its provisions and munitions, and three-fourths of the populace, black and white, along its route. Gen. Stewart threatened to come back to-day and swoop off the remaining people and houses, and nothing but his sudden pursuit by our army has perhaps prevented him from doing it.

It has blown up or otherwise destroyed every bridge and culvert on the turnpike and railroad along its route.

It has swept clean, every camp, except the few at Manassas Junction, whence its rear-guard evidently departed in hastened alarm at the sudden approach of our army. Never was an evacuation more complete.

II. Gen. Jackson has escaped from Shenandoah Valley, burning bridges between himself and Gen. Banks. This is positively stated by escaped contrabands coming in to-night.

III. The number of camps and barracks scattered far and wide would afford, even as they stand now, accommodation for near 70,000 men, and this only refers to those within eight miles of Centreville.

IV. A large portion of this evacuation must have been gradually accomplished during the past two months. But nearly 50,000 rebels were here and at Manassas within the last week, of whom 10,000 went off by the Warrenton turnpike and 40,000 by railroad to Warrenton Junction and beyond. Trains were running day and night. Gen. Johnston left on Thursday night; Gen. Smith on Saturday, and Gen. Stewart on Sunday evening. I am now writing in the room lately occupied by all these worthies in succession.

V. We believe, that the enemy has now fallen back to Warrenton, but will make his stand at Gordonsville, and give us battle there or not at all. Echo. Not at all.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune has the following statement concerning the GREAT REBEL SHAM.

I am able to state positively that some singular illustrations of the strategy of Gen. McClellan were brought to light on the advance of our army to Manassas, with which the people who pay the bills for the expensive entertainments which have been furnished to sightseers for the last seven months, ought to be acquainted.

Two gentlemen rode an hour or two in advance of our army from Fairfax to Manassas, when the fact of the evacuation of the latter place became known.

On reaching Manassas, they found not a living soul save one "contraband," who informed them, during the Winter, there had been 12,000 men at Manassas, and 14,000 at Centreville. The works at Manassas, had many of them, been unsupplied with guns, as had those at Centreville, and were not of the formidable character expected.

In Beauregard's quarters they found a roll of papers, which are now in the hands of proper parties in this city. These were found to consist of complete plans of all the works about Washington, with minute statements of the number of guns mounted in each and their caliber, together with the distances between each in feet; also, the various points indicated which were within shelling distance of various public buildings in Washington.

When the soldiers of our army came up to the sham batteries at Centreville, and realized how they had been balked of their anticipated fight, and made a laughing stock to the whole civilized world, strong men burst out into tears and imprecations upon the management which had made such imposition possible. An army of 150,000 men with 500 guns in battery, kept watching hardly a tenth of their own number for long months—this handful of men lying behind sham batteries the while, and finally escaping from them after all!

A Scene between Generals Buckner and Grant after the Surrender of Fort Donelson.

[Correspondence of the Louisville Journal.]

After the surrender of Fort Donelson, when the prisoners were being congregated for transportation to Cairo and other points, before all had been disarmed, an attempt was made to assassinate one of our officers, Major Mudd, of the 2d Illinois cavalry, who was shot in the back by some of the rebels. The case being reported to General Grant, an order was immediately issued for disarming all rebels, including the side arms of their officers. Upon learning this order, Buckner, the chivalrous, repaired to the headquarters of Gen. Grant, and in insolent tones demanded to know if such an order had been issued. Upon being informed that it had, he launched off into a strain of furious invectives, in which he charged that the order was barbarous, inhuman, and brutal, and at variance with rules of civilized warfare.

In fact, it was ungenerous and unchivalrous, and insisting that it be revoked, closing by proposing to Gen. Grant the propriety of placing chains upon them, and thrusting them into dungeons like felons—one, by the way, which I would have adopted on the suggestion. The man was permitted to indulge in his raving to an extravagant extent, because he was a prisoner, without any reply from Gen. Grant. Capt. Rawlins, A. A. General, finally replied to Buckner by stating the before-mentioned reason for depriving the officers of their side arms. Gen. Grant then turning to Buckner said: "Gen. Buckner, it was not my intention to have said anything in relation to this matter, and thus to have spared your feeling of pride and shame, but as Capt. Rawlins has thought proper to introduce the reasons, I will conclude them. You have dared to come here to complain of my acts without the right to offer an objection. You do not appear to remember that your surrender was unconditional, yet, if we compare the acts of your different armies in this war, how will yours bear inspection.

"You have cowardly shot my officers in cold blood. As I rode over the field of action I saw the dead of my army brutally insulted by your men, their clothing stripped off them and their bodies exposed without the slightest regard for common decency. Humanity has seldom marked, your course whenever our men have been unfortunate enough to fall into your hands. At Belmont your authorities disregarded all the usages of civilized warfare; my officers were crowded into cotton pens with my brave soldiers, and then thrust into prison, whilst your officers were permitted to enjoy their parole and live at our hotel, your men are given the same fare as my own, and your wounded receive our best medical attention. These are incontrovertible facts, which do not look well in contrast with the course of the Federals. I have simply taken this precaution to disarm your officers and men, because necessity compelled me to do so for the protection of my own from further assassination."

While this catalogue of wrongs was being recited General Buckner hung his head, dejected by the words of truth and abashed by the frown of power. He did not deign to reply, but skulked off like one who had begun to feel the awakening of a benumbed conscience. The same evening, however, he made a speech to his men before taking their departure, in which he made complimentary reference to the kind treatment all had received at the hands of Gen. Grant, his officers and men.

River News.

The river was rising again yesterday, with twelve feet by the marks last evening. This swell emanated principally from the Allegheny, as the Monongahela, as yet, is about stationary. The weather yesterday was cloudy and disagreeable, with a heavy snow falling at intervals.....Business was tolerably brisk at the wharf on Saturday, taking everything into consideration. There was a slight improvement in the receipts, while the shipments were moderate.....The Prima Donna from Cincinnati, and Clara Dean from Ripley, both with good trips, were the only transient arrivals. The freight of the latter boat, which consisted principally of flour, bacon and tobacco, was all consigned to Messrs. Clarke & Co.....The Emma Graham from Zanesville is due this morning. She will leave on her return trip to-morrow at 4 p. m.....The departures on Saturday were the Lizzie Martin for Zanesville, Undine for Cincinnati, and Tycoon for St. Louis. The Undine had all the freight she could take, and a fair number of passengers. The Tycoon, in command of Capt. J. H. Pepper, had nothing but a detachment of soldiers.....The Florence and Ben Franklin left Cincinnati for this city on Friday. The Citizen left Evansville for this port on Friday evening, with a full cargo. The Iowa passed Louisville on Thursday, for Nashville, with a cargo of mules.

We regret to announce the death of Capt. John T. McCombs, which sad event occurred at his late residence on Saturday morning. The deceased was at one time engaged in the wholesale grocery business, but for the past year or two he has been on the river, during which time he was in command of the "Monitorette" and "John T. McCombs." He possessed many the traits of character, and his demise will be deeply regretted by a large circle of relatives and friends.

FOR CINCINNATI AND LOUISVILLE—The popular and staunch Marmora, Capt. Brennan, will leave as above this evening positively. Passengers and shippers should remember this.....The Prima Donna, Capt. Geo. D. Moore, is announced to leave to-morrow evening.

FOR ST. LOUIS—The Bacotah, Capt. Hendrickson, and Arago, Capt. Golding, both commodious and neat passenger steamers, are loading and will leave for St. Louis forthwith.

DITHRIDGE'S XX FLINT GLASS

OVAL CARBON OIL

LAMP CHIMNEYS,

Patented October 8th, 1861.

The best that have ever yet been offered to the public. They are the best for the following reasons:

1. Because, being of an oval shape, the glass is everywhere equally distant from the flame, so that it will be stronger and more regular.

2. The oval shape is better adapted to resist the effect of sudden expansion, so that it is impossible to crack them.

3. The glass is made largely of Lead and Pearlash, giving a great degree of strength and elasticity. The chimneys which housekeepers have found to be so brittle as to crack, even when not in use, are invariably made of Lime Glass instead of Flint Glass, of which ours are manufactured.

4. But the greatest advantage of these Chimneys is that when you have one it will last forever, and if any housekeeper breaks one by the heat of the lamp, she will at her option exchange it and we will replace her cracked chimney by a dozen whole ones. This profer does not include accidents or those cases of breakage where the chimney has, through inexperience, been screwed so closely to the lamp as to prevent its expansion when heated.

Manufacturers and consumers of Carbon Oil, who have felt the magnitude of the obstacle which has existed in the great expense of chimneys, in the way of the universal use of the oil, have found a remedy in the Oval XX Flint Glass Chimney, which has materially lessened the cost of Carbon Oil light to those who use them, and increased the consumption of oil consequent upon the lessened expense for chimneys.

For sale by J. C. Kirkpatrick, L. Thumm & Co., Rogers & Nesbit, P. Hayden, Torrence Oil Co., Wehlen & Reinoke, W. Ogden & Co., W. P. Wooldridge, W. M. Murray, or at the Manufactory, Washington st., near Pennsylvania avenue.
