Wholesale Arrest of Officers--A True, but Painful History.

The following statement, communicated to the Chicago Journal, we have undoubted authority for stating, is true in every particular! The reader may imagine the rage and despair of brave men and true patriots, subjected to such outrageous indignities by a General whose whole proceedings show that his sympathies are with slavery and slaveholders. He ought to be cashiered at once. It is a disgrace to our country, and to the American name, that American soldiers and officers, as well educated, and more respectable, than this doughty General, should be subjected to such indignities, and that, too, out of regard to a vile traitor, who, if he had his deserts, ought to be hung. We call upon the President and Secretary of War to protect our soldiers from such indignities, or we shall soon have no army for such pro-slavery Generals to command. The following is the statement referred to:

A correspondent of the Chicago Journal, writing from Gen. Buell's army, under recent date, transmits the following circumstance concerning Gen. McCook's command:

On Thursday, June 26th, after a fatiguing march of fourteen miles, his division encamped within three miles of Athens, in a large open field belonging to an intense rebel. The day was exceedingly hot; hardly a breath of air stirred to fan the fevered brow, and hot as it was, the ground parched beneath their feet, the soldiers prostrated themselves upon it, completely fatigued. Soon some of the boys went to the fences, took a few rails and started a fire to boil their coffee. Had there been other timber upon the ground they would not have thought of doing it. In almost no time, nearly every regimental commander was put under arrest. The cause was taking the rails. Orders were immediately issued compelling the boys to rebuild the fence. They commenced the work.

One who was not engaged in the work, but who was anxious to ascertain the extent of the damage done, passed around the entire field, and the result of the damage done by the four regiments of the Fifth Brigade was the loss of twenty-eight rails. This was the number which the boys cut from a piece of adjoining timber and repaired the fence. The officers thus put under arrest after this cause were Col. Dodge, of the 15th Indiana; Lieut. Col. Bristol, of the 34th Illinois; Lieut. Col. Dunn, of the 29th Indiana; Major Bradford, of the 77th Pennsylvania, all commanding regiments of the 5th brigade; Col. Willich, of the 32d Indiana; Lieut. Col. Jones, of the 13th Indiana, of Gen. Johnson's brigade; the Colonel and all the Captains of the "Louisville Legion, Gen. Rousseau's brigade. The damage done by these two brigades but little exceeded that of the 5th brigade. Now either this is right or wrong. If it was right to burn the rails of Union men in Kentucky by the thousands, where is the wrong, under circumstances as above stated, of using a few rails of an avowed rebel?

Virginia Appealing to Pennsylvania.

WESTERN VIRGINIA, July 21, 1862.

The great cause and the peril of the hour should engage the earnest attention of every patriot. One year ago this day, a depressing calamity befell the cause of the Union, but by a mighty uprising of the people a great army was soon placed at the disposal of the President, and the disaster of Bull Run had almost been forgotten. The nation placed its hopes upon the army under Gen. McClellan, but his anticipations of a speedy and successful termination of the war has not been realized. At no time since the commencement of the rebellion have we had more cause for a careful survey of the field, and an earnest endeavor to understand what our duties, responsibilities and perils are. That we have greatly underestimated the power, ability and desperate determination of the rebels, few intelligent men will, at this day, deny.

Let us not further deceive ourselves, but if possible, be prepared to meet the calls of patriotism and duty, by every sacrifice which the exigency of the struggle may demand of us. Let us drop the fruitless controversies in regard to those who may be counselled for our want of success, and unite every energy to raise an army which, by its overwhelming power, can, and will, crush the rebellion before the commencement of the year 1863. This can be done if we enter into the cause with half the earnestness and by making one-half of the sacrifices that the rebels have already made. Will our patriotism shrink in this hour, and permit a glorious cause to perish for want of persistent courage and fortitude? The war must be carried on to a successful issue, or utter ruin and desolation will follow. There is no retreat now, but the war must be prosecuted to a successful termination, and the sooner we raise and equip a sufficient army, the better for every interest, and for the speedy restoration of peace. A great and successful army alone can restore peace to the country. Let us fully comprehend this idea. Suppose we took counsel of the miserable, pusillanimous beings that infest our capital, and withdrew our armies, what would be the result? Why, verily, Our country, and especially the border States of Pennsylvania and Ohio, would be overrun and devastated by fire and sword, and then would our rebel sympathizers find to their sad experience that the "tender mercies" of the rebels were truly intensified by the most malignant hate. Up, then, Pennsylvanians of every party, of every name, and by your noble devotion to a holy cause let your sister States and the world understand that there is no sacrifice that you are not ready to make for the cause of the Union.

What a grand manifestation of power and patriotism we are having in the adjoining State of Ohio. Meetings are being held all over the State, and such men as the venerable Thomas Ewing, Gov. Dennison, &c., &c., are rousing the people to a full sense of their perils and responsibilities.

I rejoice to learn that the patriotic fires of Pennsylvania are being kindled, and that there is to be a meeting of the people at Pittsburgh. It should be attended by every patriot of your country, who should again renew his vows of fidelity to the Government.

Oh, for that earnestness and zeal in this great cause which would enable every Pennsylvanian to rise to the full stature of men in patriotism. UNION.

AN INCIDENT.—Last May, two negroes escaped from the heart of Secessia, their masters being in the rebel army. They very naturally and justly took a horse apiece to effect their escape. Arriving in Washington, they went to a camp to try and sell their horses. The officer who had charge, told them to return at a certain hour with their horses. At that hour they came; the horses were taken away from them by police, and appropriated, and the two negroes arrested as horse-thieves and thrown into prison. They have there remained ever since. The prying eye of W. H. Channing ferreted out the story, and he took it to General Wadsworth, that intrepid man to the friends of justice, who instantly had them released. They were released Monday, July 21st.

FROM GEN. POPE'S COMMAND.

Our Troops go Within Forty Miles of Richmond.

IMPORTANT ENTERPRISE ON FOOT.

Skirmishing between Sigel and the Rebels.

WASHINGTON, July 21, 1862.

We have conversed with an officer who took part in the brilliant movement upon the Virginia Central Railroad at Beaver Dam, of which Gen Pope gives the official report. It was executed by Col. Mansfield Davies, of the Harris Light Cavalry, with 470 men of his command. They left Fredericksburg at 7 o'clock on Saturday evening, marched forty miles in the course of the night, and at eight o'clock were at the Beaver Dam station, which is forty miles from Richmond, on the Virginia Central. To do this, they were obliged to go fifteen miles within the enemy's lines, and twenty-two miles beyond his scouts, who are within eighteen miles of Fredericksburg.

In order to secure their retreat, two squadrons were detached to guard the bridge over the North Anna river, several miles from the railroad, and other squadrons were detailed to guard and watch the several roads. Only about 140 men under Col. Davies reached the railroad station, where they were entirely unexpected. They captured Capt. J. L. Moseley, of Virginia, an aid of Gen. Stewart's, who was waiting for the cars. He had upon his person a letter from Gen. Johnston recommending him to that officer, and recommending that officer to study Napoleon's maxims. From its contents it appeared that Gen. Stewart was at Atlee's Station, nine miles from Richmond, and that Gen. Stonewall Jackson was between Charlottesville and Staunton.

Capt. Moseley was bearer of dispatches from Gen. Stuart to Gen. Jackson. Gen. Davies destroyed the railroad and telegraph lines for four or five miles, and the station containing ammunition, flour and other valuable property, the water tanks and a large quantity of cordwood in the course of the hour which remained before the train from Richmond, which Captain Moseley had expected to take, and which had on board a brigade of troops going to re-enforce Jackson, was due.

It is a mistake to suppose, as a Washington paper states, that any railroad bridge was destroyed, as there is none at Beaver Dam. The only bridge in the vicinity is a turnpike one across the North Anna River, which was guarded as stated, and left uninjured.

The railroad was rendered useless by the felling, at frequent intervals, of trees across the track, and by tearing up some of the rails. It is believed that it will take at least 36 hours to repair damages.

The information with reference to the movements of the enemy derived from papers which fell into the hands of our forces, and from residents in the vicinity, was extremely important.

The white residents on the road were thrown into a state of great consternation, not having been accustomed to offensive operations by the National troops. The alarm manifested no apprehension, however, and in a number of cases the Virginia women waved their handkerchiefs, supposing the cavalry to be a rebel troop.

The private, who was seriously wounded by two buckshot in the head, came from Troy. He had straggled from the ranks with two others, and stopped to eat his dinner, when he was suddenly attacked by five rebel scouts. He was left at Spottsylvania Court House, the surgeon considering it unsafe to carry him forward.

The retreat was executed in the daytime, yesterday, with as much skill as the advance. A battalion of cavalry and a regiment of infantry pursued for a long distance, but gave up the chase. There were 16,000 armed rebels at Louisa Court House to the left, and a considerable force at Bowling Green to the right. After riding 80 miles in 30 hours, the command returned in excellent condition, with not a horse or a man permanently the worse for the journey.

From various channels, and in more decided tones, come complaints against the Provost Marshal of Fredericksburg, one Capt. Mansfield. We are assured on excellent authority, that within the last two or three days, notless than twenty loads of boots and shoes, salt and other articles of prime necessity to the rebels, have been taken from Fredericksburg to Richmond, under the very nose of the Provost Marshal. The mail goes regularly, and papers are received daily, and even the rebels are heard to remark among themselves that the Provost Marshal is "rather slack."

The rebels of Fredericksburg were proposing to celebrate the victory of Bull Run to-day. Some of the Brooklyn 14th boys, who were present at the battle, and have some old scores to wipe out, were anxious to cross the river and be present at the festivities.—Special to N. Y. Tribune.

The New Grand Arrangement.

The following extracts from a Washington letter, by "Agate," are interesting just now:

SIGNIFICANT VISITS.

"Gov. Sprague has just returned from a visit to Gen. Halleck, at Corinth, and has gone down to see Gen. McClellan." So run the dispatches. Perhaps there may be meaning in them.

Gov. Sprague has no interest at Corinth; no troops to call him there; no private duties, no special concern with the armies or movements of the Southwest. But Gov. Sprague has hurried interview with Gen. Halleck, and returns. Even Major Generals have been rigidly refused passes to go down to the Peninsula and see the army; but the gates open for Gov. Sprague as he returns, and he is already on the James river. Could this be if he were not on private business for the Government?

Couple with this remarkable, hurried visit first to Halleck, then to McClellan, the declaration of Senators known to be on confidential terms with the Administration, that Halleck is to take command of all the forces operating against Richmond, thus placing him over both McClellan and Pope, and the object of Governor Sprague's mission may become apparent. Add to the fact that Pope is known to desire such an arrangement, and matters become clearer still.

THE M'CLELLAN BRAWL MAY AS WELL BE ENDED.

"I see some of the newspapers in the West, whose zeal is not according to knowledge, persist in making war on Stanton, and vigorously belaboring McClellan. They might as well spare themselves the trouble of working for nothing, and the mortification of appearing ridiculous. The revelations of the War Committee, the President's trips to West Point and the Peninsula, and the senseless partizanship of the rabid McClellanites have done the business. McClellan's day is over. Henceforth he is subordinate or nothing.
