Our Iron-Clad Fleet.

We venture to say that all our readers have heard a great deal more than they exactly understand about the magnitude of our iron-clad fleet. Every one knows that we have numerous mailed vessels building and afloat, but hardly any one can tell how many or where they are. A summary of the resources of this country in iron-clad vessels, built and building, is as follows:

2 frigates, afloat.
1 Monitor, afloat.
2 gunboats, afloat (Galena and Naugatuck).
7 gunboats on Western rivers, afloat.
4 gunboats on Western rivers, purchased and mailed.
9 Monitors building.
1 Monitor, for California, building.
10 gunboats for the protection of Ohio and Indiana.
3 Mississippi gunboats.
1 tremendous ram, to be plated with 6 inch iron.
1 gunboat, to be built at the Navy Yard.
1 gunboat at Dry Dock.
1 gunboat at New York (Thirteenth street).
1 gunboat at Boston.
1 gunboat at Greenpoint.
1 gunboat at Philadelphia.
1 vessel building secretly by Mr. Ericsson.
2 new Ericson vessels. Total, 49.

Of these, one building at Philadelphia, two at New York, one at Greenpoint—and possibly others—are to be exclusively iron.

The following is the actual force of our iron fleet afloat at present:

Vessels.	Tons.	Officers and Men.	Guns.
New Ironsides	3,500	(about) 400	18
Roanoke	3,400	300	8
Naugatuck	70	100	2
Monitor	about 1,000	100	3
Galena	about 900	100	8
Benton	about 800	100	16
Carondelet	about 800	100	16
Cairo	512	100	13
Mound City	500	100	16
Cincinnati	500	100	16
A. O. Tyler	500	100	16
Essex	500	100	16
Choctaw	500	100	16
Total	15,370	1,800	166

There may be one or two more of smaller dimensions, but these are the most important. The Roanoke is the only craft among them not manned and ready for immediate service.

It requires no elaboration to give importance to these facts. A little over a year ago, the London Times reproached us for not thinking of building iron-clad vessels. It may not be agreeable to it to observe how apt scholars we are when we choose to learn. That England should be able to have, "by the end of 1862," fifteen iron-plated vessels, which cannot do anything but fight in over twenty-five feet of water, may be a matter of congratulation to the people of Great Britain; but that the United States should have fifty mailed craft, which can fight in twelve feet water, and disappear to the very surface if necessary, may also be a fact worthy of their consideration.

We may repeat that, although our summary of vessels is complete up to this day, it may be very far short of being so six weeks hence. —N. Y. Tribune.

The Voice of Kansas.

A gentleman who has just paid a visit to Kansas, closes a letter with the following pregnant paragraph:

By the way, in finishing up my notes of this hasty trip, I must say that a positive but restrained feeling of disgust animates the people of Kansas. That community, strong in courage and abounding in intelligence, though weak in numbers, has received a spiritual baptism, which has given the prophetic power of faith. The people of Kansas have fought this same fight before, and know what constitutes the elements of success. They deplore the vacillation that deprives our heaviest blows of half their force, and patiently await the hour when the country and the President may receive the "extreme unction" which they fear, will be administered only in the visible presence of death, and which alone will enable them to see the means of salvation so long rejected. The feeling is quite unanimous, that freedom to all is the magic watchword which can alone invoke the presence of final victory; Democrats share it as well as Republicans; in fact, there are no more pro-slavery men there, among the really loyal, none. They are all abolitionists, and if I can form any opinion in so hasty a trip of the sentiment of Illinois, it is fast coming up to the same standard.

Yankee Editors.

Far be it from us to complain of the editors of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and the other thorough-going Yankee cities. Swine will wallow in filth, obscene birds will live on carrion. Perhaps some notice should be taken of Wallace, of the New York Herald. Wallace is a Virginian. Poor devil, he sold himself, body and soul, to Bennett years ago, and must do his master's bidding. But, unprincipled Swiss, as he is, Wallace's heart has all along been with the South. His editorials show this. In his worst diatribes against the rebels, there may be detected an undercurrent of sarcasm, a devilish jeering at the North, and a dropping of inuendoes and suggestions well calculated to unsettle public opinion. His panegyrics upon Lincoln are rich in irony. His assaults upon the Abolitionists are evidently sincere. He knows they brought on the war, and he has seen from the beginning how that war will end. He is steadily working up the fiendish spirit of the mob against the authors of the war. Alas! what a day that will be when the infuriate mob is turned loose upon the Greeley's, the Bryants, the Raymonds, the Sumners, Wades and Wilsons. Bennett approves these machinations of Wallace, for Bennett always keeps an eye to the windward. He knows that the day of retribution will surely come, and he is preparing for it. At least one newspaper office in New York will not be leveled. It is Wallace, we think, who writes those Baltimore letters, in which such appalling statistics are given of the rebel armies. Would to God we had the force in the field that Wallace gives us; not many months would elapse before we would give him a chance to hang out his Confederate flag. Wallace has done the best he could for us, and we pass him by.—Richmond Whig, Aug. 2d.

Universal Emancipation.

A Washington correspondent says:

The Government is still advancing. The speech of Cassius M. Clay finds an echo in the heart of more than one member of the Administration. Gen. Clay is the guest of Secretary Chase, and I believe they both look at these questions with the same clear eye. Mr. Chase was an old Democrat—when Democracy meant justice—and he looks at slavery as the cause of the Rebellion, in an unprejudiced light.

A battle for liberty would bring the sympathy of Europe. A shout would go up from the Garibaldis, the O'Connors, the Kossuths, and the descendants of the free Tells would be awakened in their Alpine snows. We cannot claim their sympathy now. The Italians know nothing about Unions, nor England nor France; but liberty is familiar to all. The plea of the Hon. C. P. Johnson to the President, to emancipate by power of proclamation, found a response in the heart of more than one Cabinet officer.

MORE REBEL INHUMANITY.—Col. Corcoran says Gen. Prince, taken prisoner in the recent battle beyond Culpepper, is kept in prison over a dead-house, and that all the other officers captured from Gen. Pope's command are shamefully and tyrannically treated.

From Gen. Pope's Army.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17, 1862.

We have received the following advices from the headquarters of Gen. Sigel, Crooked Run, dated 5 p. m., Aug. 16:

Eight prisoners were taken yesterday by scouting parties from the 1st Virginia Cavalry, under command of Major Kreps. The prisoners confirm previous reports in regard to the precipitate retreat of Jackson. Jackson's men are deserting him by hundreds, and prisoners say deserters are more numerous than forced enlistments.

Deserters and contrabands from the enemy's line last evening say Jackson is being rapidly re-enforced from Richmond, that the main body of his army is four miles this side of Gordonsville, anticipating an advance of Pope.

The Rebel Gen. Hill dined with his brother, who resides within half a mile of Gen. Sigel's headquarters, last Sunday. He told the family that Jackson had not, at any one time, more than 6,000 men in the field, and that they relied more upon the natural strength of their position than upon their numbers in the fight. He complained very much of desertions from South Carolina and Louisiana regiments, and called them poltroons. Two Louisiana regiments were at one time upon the point of throwing down their arms, but a section of their own artillery was turned upon and compelled them to submit.

The enemy appeared in force upon the South bank of the Rapidan yesterday. This morning at sunrise he drove in our pickets to within half a mile of Gen. Sigel's headquarters. Major Kreps, who occupies the front, mounted his battalion and advanced with two guns to meet the enemy. Although the enemy crossed the Rapidan with two regiments of cavalry and advanced boldly, he fell back precipitately upon the approach of Major Kreps, to the south bank of the Rapidan, where he was supported by infantry and artillery. As Major Kreps approached the river the enemy opened artillery upon him and held him there. Both parties remain facing each other, and it is thought the passage of the Rapidan will be obstinately contested. In the skirmishing we lost one Lieutenant and five privates of the 1st Virginia cavalry.

We have received the following advices from the headquarters of Gen. Pope, near Cedar Mountain. A scout sent by Gen. Banks who returned this morning from Richmond, via Gordonsville, reports that Jackson is between Gordonsville and Orange Court House with his army and that 30,000 additional troops are, at Gordonsville. The rebel force engaged according to their own account, was 27,000.

Gen. Banks is rapidly recovering. He was able to walk about the grounds of his house yesterday and to write. He will be in the field in a few days. His troops have greater confidence in him than ever.

The list of wounded officers of the 2d Massachusetts was incorrectly printed or telegraphed. Lieuts. Leland, Russell, Brown-King, Robeson, Graton and Oakey are wounded, but not prisoners.

This afternoon, Gen. Sigel, who commands the advance, reports that a large body of men under Ewell, showed themselves on the high bank of the Rapidan this morning, and were apparently preparing to cross, but were discouraged by the appearance of the forces ready to receive them, and withdrew without making the attempt.

OFF THE RAPIDAN, Aug. 15, 1862.

To-day I have ridden up from Culpepper Court House, having crossed the battle field and gathered some facts from which, I think, I can estimate approximately the Union losses. The figures have been set by some of the papers at 1,500. I believe they will exceed twice that number in the two divisions directly involved. Here are my data:

Williams' division, on our right, lost one-half of its officers and men in killed, wounded and missing. Crawford's brigade going into action with 86 commissioned officers and 1,769 enlisted men, and coming out with 55 commissioned officers and 811 enlisted men minus. Gordon's brigade shared but little better.

Augur's division, on our left, opposed by rebel troops under Gen. Branch, of N. C., went into battle with 2,700 men, and retired in the evening with a total loss of over 1,100, or about 40 per cent. of the whole.

The rebel losses are immense, probably quite as heavy as ours—the horrible accuracy of our artillery reaping more than Ewell's trap caught. They, however, took much the larger number of prisoners.

For the forces engaged and the time occupied, this is unquestionably the most severe battle of the war. The ratio of killed to wounded was fearfully and unusually great.

One of the rebel prisoners—a Major in a Mississippi regiment—states that if our side had not made the attack as and when it did, Jackson would, himself, have made it within half an hour.

"Stonewall" was confident and eager. He made a boastful speech to his men on Saturday morning—so prisoners say—promising to lead them straight to Washington, and swearing to sleep that night in Culpepper. His ability was not equal to his plans, for after striking a bloody blow, and almost annihilating one of our divisions, he is a fugitive from justice, flying toward Richmond, and burning the bridges behind him.

The rebels threw their dead into ditches and pits, and
