From Vicksburg.

MEMPHIS, Feb. 16—10 P. M.

Advices from Vicksburg to Friday say the Queen of the West has been supplied with coal, and had gone on another expedition down the river. It is believed that a grand movement is to be commenced shortly, which will put Vicksburg in our possession. The movement is so formidable in character that it is certain of success. It is feared the enemy may evacuate before it is fully brought to bear.—The nature of the movement is contraband.

BOLD FEAT OF THE INDIANOLA.

We had a brief telegram of the feat of the Indianola running the gauntlet of the Vicksburg batteries, but we add the following brief but vivid account from the special correspondence of the Cincinnati Gazette:

MEMPHIS, Feb. 17.

The new gunboat Indianola has followed the example of the Queen of the West, and run the blockade of Vicksburg. The feat was performed on Friday night. She started at eleven o'clock on a dark, drizzly, foggy night, manned by unquailing hearts. She began her perilous voyage with watchful eyes on her fires.

The enemy, in spite of all precautions against being seen, observed her. The signal passed from battery to battery, and then came the roar of artillery and the iron rain. The batteries vied with each other in their efforts to sink the boat; but she defiantly footed, on her stalwart and determined, down the Mississippi.

The deafening reverberations told how great an effort the beleaguered enemy were making. So mighty was the shock our steamboats shivered from stem to stern, though five miles distant.

The Indianola safely passed the fiery ordeal, and reached her destination at the mouth of the canal. It was a great feat, promising the best results.

Now we learn below states that the rebels at Port Hudson are communicating with the Gulf via the Atchafalaya river. The ram Queen of the West will put a stop to that game. One million bales of cotton are said to be in the country below Baton Rouge, awaiting permits to ship. Some traders were arrested in dry land No. 10, yesterday, with $25,000 in gold on their persons, in belts about their bodies.

The Atchafalaya is a bayou rather than a river, and extends from the Mississippi to the Gulf, at a bay of the same name, about one hundred miles west of the mouth of the Mississippi. For about one-half its length it expands into a lake. It is through this river that it is thought the main current of the Mississippi may be turned, should the opening into Lake Providence prove uncontrollable, as it is believed it will be. In another article it is more particularly spoken of.

A Tremendous Probability.

The correspondent of the Missouri Republicans, with Gen. Grant's army, gives the following information as to one of the proposed cut-offs by which the way is to be opened to the Gulf:

But by far the most important operation of the three is the proposed canal which it is intended to cut from Lake Providence into the Bayou Tensas or Bayou Macon, thence up the Tensas or Bœuf Rivers, into the Ouchita and Red rivers, leaving Vicksburg to the southward fifty miles. That this is quite feasible we have the testimony of old river-men. The Tensas and Bœuf are at times navigable for small boats as far up as the Shreveport Railroad crossings. If a sufficiency of the Mississippi could be diverted into Lake Providence, the channel would be navigable for the whole length of the Tensas. The strip of excavation is less than three miles in width, and Gen. McArthur is already at work upon it at that place with a brigade.

The difficulty in this case will not be to get enough water into the channel, but to prevent getting too much. If old Father Mississippi but rises an inch too high, or if Gen. McArthur and Col. Bissell but dig out a few shovelsfull too much, he may not only escape Vicksburg, but ruin the whole of Louisiana.

The well known properties of the Lower Mississippi to cut and spread, need not be plain, further than to say that, in high water, there are innumerable bayous, branches, cut-offs, and even rivers, which run from and into the nearest stream in curious alternation. The New Orleans people noticed that, thirty years ago, the Mississippi was eating into the shores at the mouth of Red river, so as to be in danger of making over into the Atchafalaya, a river which is fed from the Red river and empties into the Gulf of Mexico at the bay of that name. This would have diverted the valuable river away from the city and left it by the side of an insignificant bayou. In order to prevent this catastrophe, they cut through a neck of land, a few miles below the mouth of Red river, and, the channel washing through, made what is called the Shreve-cut-off. This had the desired effect, and New Orleans has grown somewhat in the interim.

What would be the effect of turning any considerable portion of the Mississippi into the Tensas and Red river? There would be the most imminent danger of the torrent of water rushing right into the Atchafalaya with such force as to permanently change the bed of the Mississippi to that channel.

Now, we have below states that the rebels at Port Hudson are communicating with the Gulf via the Atchafalaya river. The ram Queen of the West will put a stop to that game. One million bales of cotton are said to be in the country below Baton Rouge, awaiting permits to ship. Some traders were arrested in dry land No. 10, yesterday, with $25,000 in gold on their persons, in belts about their bodies.

But by far the most important operation of the three is the proposed canal which it is intended to cut from Lake Providence into the Bayou Tensas or Bayou Macon, thence up the Tensas or Bœuf Rivers, into the Ouchita and Red rivers, leaving Vicksburg to the southward fifty miles. That this is quite feasible we have the testimony of old river-men. The Tensas and Bœuf are at times navigable for small boats as far up as the Shreveport Railroad crossings. If a sufficiency of the Mississippi could be diverted into Lake Providence, the channel would be navigable for the whole length of the Tensas. The strip of excavation is less than three miles in width, and Gen. McArthur is already at work upon it at that place with a brigade.

The difficulty in this case will not be to get enough water into the channel, but to prevent getting too much. If old Father Mississippi but rises an inch too high, or if Gen. McArthur and Col. Bissell but dig out a few shovelsfull too much, he may not only escape Vicksburg, but ruin the whole of Louisiana.

The well known properties of the Lower Mississippi to cut and spread, need not be plain, further than to say that, in high water, there are innumerable bayous, branches, cut-offs, and even rivers, which run from and into the nearest stream in curious alternation. The New Orleans people noticed that, thirty years ago, the Mississippi was eating into the shores at the mouth of Red river, so as to be in danger of making over into the Atchafalaya, a river which is fed from the Red river and empties into the Gulf of Mexico at the bay of that name. This would have diverted the valuable river away from the city and left it by the side of an insignificant bayou. In order to prevent this catastrophe, they cut through a neck of land, a few miles below the mouth of Red river, and, the channel washing through, made what is called the Shreve-cut-off. This had the desired effect, and New Orleans has grown somewhat in the interim.

What would be the effect of turning any considerable portion of the Mississippi into the Tensas and Red river? There would be the most imminent danger of the torrent of water rushing right into the Atchafalaya with such force as to permanently change the bed of the Mississippi to that channel.

Now we learn below states that the rebels at Port Hudson are communicating with the Gulf via the Atchafalaya river. The ram Queen of the West will put a stop to that game. One million bales of cotton are said to be in the country below Baton Rouge, awaiting permits to ship. Some traders were arrested in dry land No. 10, yesterday, with $25,000 in gold on their persons, in belts about their bodies.

The Atchafalaya is a bayou rather than a river, and extends from the Mississippi to the Gulf, at a bay of the same name, about one hundred miles west of the mouth of the Mississippi. For about one-half its length it expands into a lake. It is through this river that it is thought the main current of the Mississippi may be turned, should the opening into Lake Providence prove uncontrollable, as it is believed it will be. In another article it is more particularly spoken of.

From New Orleans--An Important Expedition--Gen. Banks to Take the Field.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 8.—Before the lapse of another week events will have occurred in this department of a character to attract, for a time, general interest to our affairs. About a hundred miles directly westward from New Orleans, in the vicinity of the Bayou Teche, one of the longest bayous of the Mississippi, has been for some time gathering a body of rebels, now commanded by Brigadier General Dick Taylor, formerly of this city. This force numbered, according to the best information I have been able to gather, some six thousand five hundred men. Of these about fifteen hundred are cavalry. The remainder consists of three field batteries—one of them the second what formerly Symmes battery—two regiments of Confederate regulars, and some regiments of conscripts. They are believed to be the only rebel troops between New Orleans and Texas, and are certainly the only Confederates remaining in the best sugar-growing section of Louisiana. To dislodge them was the object of an expedition undertaken recently by Brigadier General Weitzel, who was only so far successful as to accomplish the destruction of the rebel gunboat Cotton upon the Teche. A larger force is now to enter what is called the Teche country, under the command of General Weitzel, and it is reported, in quarters where reports should be worthy of credit, that the movement actually commenced yesterday.

The affair has been planned with profound secrecy. The progress of General Weitzel will by no means prove bloodless. He must overcome resistance at every step. He will probably be supported by some four or five gunboats; the prize Calhoun, a ferry boat, carrying a one hundred pounder; the Kingman, also an old ferry boat, carrying a hundred pound gun; the Estrella, and one or two others.

GENERAL BANKS TO TAKE THE FIELD IN PERSON.—The return of Gen. Auger from Baton Rouge to New Orleans, and the fact that he has rented a house here, have induced the belief that Gen. Banks proposes to take the field in person. If so, it is not unlikely that he may assume the direction of this advance westward.—Corres. N. Y. Post.

The K. G. C.'s in Indiana--Presentments Against Them by the Grand Jury.

An Indianapolis dispatch, of the 17th instant, tells us that the Grand Jury are after the K. G. C.'s. It states that the Grand Jury of the United States Court have made two presentments against the disloyal secret society. Five witnesses refused to reveal more than two degrees. One of them, a man named Hughes, from Johnson county, testified that he belonged to a secret organization, and had taken the first and second degrees; would not divulge the third; that the penalty for divulging the third was that his bowels would be torn out; that they were sworn to support the Democratic ticket; that they have a military sign to be used in battle with the rebels; that they know each other well, and every K. G. C. can easily be recognized by certain signs. He was given twenty-four hours by Judge Smith to tell what the third degree was.

GEN. FREMONT FOR ACTIVE SERVICE.—An Indianapolis dispatch, of the 17th instant, says that Colonel R. H. Hudson has received orders to report immediately to General Fremont at New York. The Colonel has seen much service, both in Virginia and Missouri, on General Fremont's staff.
