A New Pass into the Yazoo.

Some sixty or seventy miles below the Yazoo Pass, and but a short distance below Napoleon, Steele's Bayou puts out from the Mississippi in the direction of the Yazoo. A few miles from the Mississippi this bayou enters Deer Creek. Thence the way is clear to the Yazoo at a point below Yazoo City, through the Rolling Fork and Sunflower. The whole distance is about 200 miles, and the route is said to be much shorter, less exposed, more easily defended by gunboats, and in every way a better avenue through which to get into the rear of Vicksburg, than any heretofore discovered.

On the 13th the pioneer vessels of Admiral Porter's expedition explored the bayou, and the following day succeeded in reaching Deer Creek. The gunboat Ozark went made the explorations, and the Pittsburgh lay off Johnson's Plantation, on Sunday. On Sunday, the 15th, the Admiral went up on the gunboat General Price, which arrived here the previous day; and on Monday the Louisville, Mound City and a transport, with two regiments of infantry, followed. A number of mortars were also taken up.

Refugees and prisoners express the opinion that the expedition will be a complete success. Through the bayou and for several miles in Deer creek a passage could only be effected by severe labor in cutting away interlacing boughs, and sawing trees overhanging those streams. At the latest advices, Monday night, the foremost vessels were in the Rolling Fork, and it is probable that on Tuesday they would make a passage into the Sunflower.

This will put our gunboats into the Yazoo, between Yazoo City and Vicksburg, and enable them to seize all the transports in that river and the Sunflower. Admiral Porter is sanguine of very important results.

Our Fleet and the Port Hudson Batteries.

We have had singularly conflicting accounts of the passage of this strong place by Admiral Farragut's fleet. First the rebels said that one vessel was burnt, one got past, and the remainder were driven back. Then we had news that all the fleet had run past except the Mississippi, which, having run aground, was not on fire. Next we had an account, apparently official, which substantially corroborated the rebel account. But subsequent dispatches (given in this paper) put it beyond all question that the fleet, with the exception of the Mississippi, got safely past. Two of the vessels had been up near Vicksburg, in communication with Gen. Grant, and others were supposed to have gone up the Red river.

Vicksburg will be so invested both by land and water that it will be untenable, and the probability is that it will be evacuated. A way of retreat is still open to the rebels by way of the Vicksburg and Jackson railroad. Indeed, information from the South represents that the evacuation of Vicksburg is being advocated for strategic advantages—prominent rebels declaring that by withdrawing their troops from Vicksburg and massing them in Middle Tennessee, they can oblige Rosecrans to repeat the backward movements of Buell last year.

Opening of Lake Providence Canal.

A dispatch, dated Lake Providence, La., March 17, thus describes the scene when the levee was cut and the rushing waters of the Mississippi sent by a new course to the Gulf of Mexico:

At sundown last evening the marriage of the Mississippi with the headwaters of the Ouachita and Black rivers were consummated, and this morning a stream 100 feet wide is raging and tearing through the break in the levee. It is impossible to say what the end will be.

This morning a skiff, with three or four sailors went through the crevice, creating a perfect furore of excitement. The little craft entered the raging waters, reeling like a drunken man, and all expected every moment to see her swamped in the boiling waters, as she rose first on the crest of a billow, and then plunged in the yawning chasm below. It was for a time doubtful which would conquer, the watery element, or the frail vessel. When she had reached a point three hundred feet below, the little craft came into still water. Then the long pent up feelings of the spectators found expression in shouts and cheers of congratulation and joy.

Government Deposits.—Jay Cooke & Co., Philadelphia, government loan agent, announce that in future five per cent. interest will be allowed on all deposits of legal tender notes, with the Treasury Department, and that such parties as have deposits, drawing four per cent. interest, can withdraw them without the customary ten days' notice for redeposit at five per cent. interest.

Prize Money and Prize Agents.—The late act of Congress has a humane and judicious provision, which renders unnecessary the employment of agents or attorneys to collect prize money for officers, seamen, or marines in the Navy. It provides that prize money shall be paid to the Navy Department, and by the Department credited to each officer, seaman, or marine in the books, and paid to him, as his wages or salary is paid, by the paymaster.

It is stated that when Commodore Porter' last "turreted monster" passed Vicksburg, the rebels in their haste and zeal burst seven of their largest guns in firing on her, killing and wounding a number of their own men. If all their shots had hit, they would only have succeeded in stinking a scow. The result was certainly a great triumph.

The Ninth Army Corps, under command of General Balday Smith, will form part of General Burnside's new command. General Smith not being confirmed as Major General will accordingly be relieved. General Parke will be assigned to this corps.

Hon. John J. Henry, the newly appointed Commissioner and Consul General from the United States to the Republic of Liberia, is a conveyancer and farmer, residing near Delaware City, Delaware.

Interesting Account of the Expedition into Florida.

A correspondent of the New York World, a paper by no means partial to the great experiment of converting slaves into soldiers, gives the following interesting account of the capture of Jacksonville, Florida, by the negro brigade, brief accounts of which we have already published:

The two negro regiments have taken and now occupy the town of Jacksonville, in Florida. The capture was a surprise and totally unopposed, but the next day they were attacked by the enemy in some force, but successfully repulsed them. Such are the bare facts of the case; the details are as follows:

The darkies left Port Royal on the evening of the 6th instant, the steamer Boston being very properly selected as the transport of the expedition. Next day they reached Fernandina, and on the 8th they waited at the mouth of the St. John's river for the armed transport John Adams. At 2 A. M. of the 10th they were joined by the United States gunboats Norwich, Captain Duncan, and Uncas, Captain Watson, and shortly afterwards started for Jacksonville, which place they reached at 8 A. M. Two companies of negroes were immediately landed on the dock, and before the inhabitants of the town were made cognizant of their fate, pickets were placed on guard at all the approaches.

Very few male inhabitants were found in the town, everybody capable of bearing arms being conscripted into the rebel army. The women and children proved to be in a wretched state of destitution, their clothes mostly in rags, and nothing to eat but a small amount of corn shed out by a pretty plentiful supply of rice. When it was known that the Yankees had returned to Jacksonville, and that the town was surrounded with negro pickets, several ladies came on board the Boston, and, of course, were well received by the Captain and officers. One of the ladies in question proved to be the daughter of Gov. Floyd, and her condition was a type of the rest. Her husband, an officer in the Confederate army, had returned home on sick leave, and he must have been horrified at the state in which he found his family, for the universal destitution was such as never before was seen in this once happy country. The lady and her companions were invited to the table of the Boston, but declared they could eat nothing while their families were almost starving at home; and an examination of the houses, which but a few months ago were the abodes of plenty and wealth, proved that the statement was in no sense exaggerated. Beautiful little children crawled in rags about the rooms, and the only larder seemed to be a box of uncooked rice, from which they vainly endeavored to allay their hunger. Everything else eatable had been carried away by the rebel soldiers, or, to call them by the name which they really merit, guerrillas, whose solitary occupation in Florida seems to be stealing hogs and poultry, and carrying off every able-bodied male to swell the ranks of the army. A farmer had just managed to effect his escape into our lines at Fernandina. He told our troops there that, a few weeks previous, he possessed a thriving farm near to Jacksonville, but a band of guerrillas at night time stole half his hogs and seriously diminished the number of his chickens. A few days elapsed and a second body of marauders came round and seized the remainder, giving him in exchange an order for the value of the animals upon the departmental quartermaster. His troubles were only commencing. When it was found that he had nothing else to lose, a Confederate officer, charged with enforcing the conscription act, coolly informed him that his place was in the ranks of the army, and knowing full well that the opinion would be followed up by coercive measures, he lost no time in taking to his heels and reaching Fernandina under cover of the woods.

The news of the Yankee irruption into Jacksonville quickly reached the enemy outside, and next day (the 11th,) at half-past 10 o'clock in the morning, the alarm was given by the pickets being driven in toward the town. The confederates were found to number 500 cavalry. Dismounting from their horses they formed themselves into a solid mass of infantry and marched in a confident manner upon the position held by the First South Carolina Volunteers, Col. Higginson, commanding the expedition, immediately dispatched the Second Regiment, under the orders of Col. Montgomery, into the woods surrounding Jacksonville, for his scouts made him cognizant of a second body of cavalry in the forest, whose design was evidently to outflank his main force while the latter was attacked in front by the dismounted horsemen. Col. Montgomery arrived at his destination not a moment too soon. Throwing the 230 men composing the regiment into line, he received the cavalry with a volley which threw them into confusion, and immediately advanced upon their disordered ranks before they had time to recover. Meanwhile, the main body of negroes, under Col. Higginson, stood their ground manfully, stopped the march of the enemy's infantry, and finally drove them back into the woods, thus closing the events of the day.

The casualties on our side were trifling, and doubtless not very great on that of the rebels, for the engagement did not last over half an hour. So far as I have been able to learn, one negro only was killed, although many were wounded, and it would be difficult to estimate the enemy's loss, as he left no dead on the field and carried off most of the wounded.

There was little, if any, skulking on the part of the darkies, owing, doubtless, to the presence of the gunboats. When, however, the rebels retreated, they seemed forgetful of all discipline, and it was as much as their officers could do to prevent them breaking ranks and pursuing the retreating foe into the woods. Probably the enemy's intention was merely to make a reconnoissance in force for the purpose of examining the true position of our officers in command, and they therefore attempted nothing further than holding the captured town.

Next day the rebels again appeared, but in what force was unknown. This time the gunboats got into play, and matters became too hot in the woods for the "crackers" to remain. It is possible that the presence of these negro regiments at Jacksonville may lead to active operations in that neighborhood, and maybe we shall not be content with merely holding our present position. A considerable force is expected to leave here to-day—more than sufficient to clear out any rebels which are to be found in that section of the State. There is a rumor that our volunteers are to garrison the town while the negroes penetrate the interior.

"Never Say Die."

Three months ago a young musician well-known in this city, struggling with poverty, undertook to commit suicide. He had a single dollar remaining, with no prospect of obtaining more. He invested the dollar in a bottle of Rhine wine, drank it, and ordered up a three very pair of slippers in which to "shuffle off the mortal coil." He decided upon drowning as the easier method of leaving a frigid world. He went down to Gallowhill street wharf, to commit suicide by drowning.

One of the harbor police, divining his intention, took him, to his house, and like a good Samaritan ministered to his necessities. He remained at the policeman's house for two days. While there he casually observed in a newspaper a four stanza ballad. In a moment of inspiration he improvised an air for it. He took on new life. Energy was aroused within him, and he wrote out the melody with piano accompaniment. A publisher of music next day agreed to get out the piece, with the usual copyright to the author.

We yesterday learned that the young Teuton, who three months ago was in intention a suicide, has since received $1,750 upon the copyright sale of the ballad. It changed to be a hit, like the song "When this cruel war is over," a song that has netted its author the sum of $10,000, copyright alone. The moral of this is "never say die." The darkest cloud has a silver lining. In nine cases out of ten the suicide repents of his deed at the moment his jugular is severed, and where it is first ascertained that styptics can have no saving efficacy.—Phila. North American.

Gen. Burnside's Orders.—One great duty with which Gen. Burnside is charged in his new Department is to defend Kentucky from apprehended Rebel invasion. He will be furnished with an ample force for that purpose. Should circumstances favor he may co-operate with Gen. Rosecrans in liberating East Tennessee.—New York Gov. N. Y. Tribune.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Mail Dispatches to the Pittsburgh Gazette.

WASHINGTON, March 25, 1863.

EASTERN TROOPS GOING TO CINCINNATI.

For several days we have suppressed intelligence of the fact that Burnside's old North Carolina troops, the 9th Army Corps, were being gradually and in a manner avoiding public notice, removed to the Department of the Ohio. The fact, however, having been published here under the very nose of the War Department, there can be no further motive in refraining from mentioning it.

TIGHTENING THE REGULATIONS.

The abuses resulting from the free admission of refugees through our lines have led to regulation that hereafter no civilian will be allowed to enter or go out of the lines of the Department of Washington, on the south side of the Potomac, without a pass from the headquarters in this city. Persons coming into the lines will be stopped at the outposts for examination, and important cases will be detained until they can be referred to the Headquarters here for advisement.

OUR RELATIONS WITH THE NEGRO REPUBLIC.

The treaty between the United States and Liberia has just been published officially. It stipulates that perpetual peace and friendship and reciprocal freedom of commerce shall exist between the parties. They are to treat each other equally with the most favored nations, protecting both persons and property. The United States are not to interfere in affairs between Liberia and the aboriginal inhabitants, unless solicited, with the territory and jurisdiction of Liberia, and citizens of our Government residing there are desired to abstain from all such intercourse with the aborigines as will lead to violations of the laws or peace of the country.

ANOTHER INDIAN EMBASSY.

Another large deputation of Indians, representing the Cherokees, Kiowas, Camanches, Arapahoes, Apaches and Osages, has arrived here. They come mostly from the Rocky Mountains, and their people are scattered over a vast section of country. They have visited Washington at the solicitation of the Government, whose object is to concentrate them so as to render the routes across the plains to California and the gold mines more secure, and to make treaties of peace with them.

LATE ARRIVAL FROM REBEL DOMINIONS.

An unusually interesting meeting of the Union League was held at their rooms in this city last evening, A. M. Gangewer, of Ohio, presiding.

There were present four soldiers, who were part of a detachment of twenty-two men sent out from Shelbyville, Tennessee, nearly a year ago, by General Mitchel, to break up the rebel lines of railroad and telegraphic communication in Georgia. By oversight in not cutting the telegraphic wires in time, the expedition proved a failure and was captured. They were at once ironed and double ironed, chained by threes and thrown into jail. They were treated as criminals and not as prisoners of war. After seven months of confinement they were taken to Knoxville, in Tennessee, where seven of their number were condemned as spies; and after being taken back to Atlanta, Georgia, were there hung.

Afterwards eight others escaped, and now this little remnant of the band come from Castle Thunder, at Richmond, released by the earnest remonstrances of our Government.

Three of them, Messrs. Pittiger, Howard, and Buffum, are from Ohio, and one, Mr. Hornel, from New York. They give evidences of indescribable sufferings, and their joy at being free once more is unbounded.

They gave their depositions before
