By J. G. Norwood, M D.

The object of the entire work is to give the history, characteristic symptoms, progress and treatment of all common diseases in a correct, simple and intelligible form, so, enabling the capacities of all who ought, and may, exercise a wholesome control over a disease, or in the termination of which human life may be at stake.

The treatment pursued by the generality of practitioners, and found most successful, particularly in the Diseases Endemic to the South and West, has been adopted with much manliness and great care.

The Family Medical Library, it is believed, has given more general satisfaction to the public than any book extant. By its simple and perspicuous directions, and the remedies and their proper quantities, any one of ordinary intelligence can be enabled to treat most of the diseases without the necessity of calling in a physician.
