RIDGWAY, PA., MAY 23, 1878.

Last Day of School.

Tuesday, last, was that day. And in the afternoon an exhibition was given, the programme of which is given below. The exercises were listened to by a full house and all hands seemed well pleased. The performance of little Henry Willard, who is but little more than four years old, were given in a manner to do credit to an older head. The composition "Our School" was well written and neat. As to the other performances we can only say they were very well given. The windows of the school room were darkened and the lamps lighted. The exercises commenced at half-past one, and ended at four o'clock.

(Concluded.) In this and many other ways the hemlock lumber trade of Maine has the advantage of us. They need not necessarily sell at less price, and I do not think they do as a general rule- almost hopeless. that is, the quoted prices of hemlock in Maine are not lower than in Philadelphia and Albany. But, by reason of manufacturing their lumber at tide water, they can utilize all their slabs and ordinary wastage, and "saw to order," which gives them a great advantage over us. Hemlock lumbermen everywhere will understand the difference between one dollar made on each thousand and fifty cents lost. The one encourages and builds up trade, the other kills business and ruins all concerned. From some personal knowledge of the hemlock lumber trade, as pursued on the Delaware river, in the State of New York, its branches and tribufree to say that it has been a business involving great labor and no profit, while the hemlock lumbermen of Maine have had a profitable business, and always been able to pay the owner of the land fully fifty cents, and often as high as two dollars stumpage for their logs. If the lumbermen of Pennsylvania are unable to handle with profit the millions of feet of logs now rotting in the woods it is because the policy of the State forbids such use of the streams as will allow them to handle this cheap lumber to advantage. The laws relating to this intrest are friendly to the rafting of lumber, but it seems to have been taken for granted that this mode of forwarding lumber is better than to float unsawed timber to where it can be made available to better advantage than at present. It is believed that such preference is the result of indifference or want of attention to the whole subject rather than to a well-formed conviction that there are no better methods. It is with this conviction that I have invited attention to the State of Maine method of lumbering, as applicable to our portion of Pennsylvania. Hemlock lumber must be sold cheap that is, it must be offered at a low price, if it is to enter into universal use by farmers and builders. What we want to do is, not to study how to raise the price of manufactured hemlock lumber, but, rather, to furnish it first instance, and finally compel, the and other States bordering on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, to build barns and sheds for their cattle, and inclose their fields with fences made of hemlock pickets and boards, and at a cost the South and West. This lumber has been presented to them either at garb, as to repel all attempts at its general adoption.

COST OF HEMLOCK LUMBER. lumber manufactured at or near Pittsburgh, from logs floated down the Alleghany and its tributaries? ost of stumpage (per 1,000 feet)... utting and stocking......

Manufacturing or sawing. Cost delivered on flat boats ... The question I wish to propound to the dealers and consumers of lumber on all the Western rivers is this: If you could always depend upon a supply of clean, merchantable hemlock lumber at Pittsburgh at $5 per thousand, how much more of it could you consume than you do now? I think the answer would be such as made to me by a Kentucky farmer within a few months. He said: "It would be a 'god send' to the cattle of Indiana and Kentucky if the farmers could get cheap lumber and shingles, for in that case many farmers would house their stock, whereas now the cattle stand shivering for three months of the year in the cold."

I shall be reminded that I have made no provision for profit in furnishing lumber at five dollars, at Pittsburgh. My answer is that neither does our present system furnish any profit at eight dollars. But in this es timate I have made no claim for the value of what is now wasted, slabs, etc., from which pickets, lath and shingles can be made to great advantage; when the product of this refuse is so near a market, it is claimed that it alone will pay the whole cost of running and booming. It must be remembered that, with our present imsawdust alone will give all the power whether this is done at Pittsburgh or at the head waters of our streams, as but, instead of burning the slabs and edgings in open fires, as is now the practice, all these would be utilized and made to pay a large share of the expense of manufacturing. What would be the immediate and

The competition from the West, of the lower grades of pine, together with the prejudice against hemlock covered with dirt and oil, has rendered all efforts in the present manner

What is then wanted to introduce this better way of manufacturing hemlock lumber is to secure from the Legislature of Pennsylvania a law authorizing logs to be thrown into all the streams emptying into the Allegheny

In addition to this general permission there should be formed log-driving and booming companies for each of the principal streams; or, what would be far better, there should be one general company to be taries, for the past fifty years, I am known as the "Allegheny Log Driving and Booming Co.," which would ininclude all the tributary streams. Because there has been one booming company which has been a source of great profit to a few monopolists, we should not be deterred from having another. Indeed, the unfortunate experience in regard to the Williomsport boom would enable us to ask for such form of legislation as would be sure to avoid the monopoly features of that one. I ven ture to think, availing ourselves of the experience and even the forms of charter granted in the State of Maine, that a company could be formed with its capital so distributed, and with such limitations as to dividends, that it would be equally acceptable to lumbermen and boom owners. thrown into or placed on the banks of all the tributary streams. Each owner's logs would have a registered mark. Generally these logs would be bought up by the mill owners or large operators, for it would be undesirable for any one man to handle his own logs down at Pittsburgh unless he was a large holder. But, however this might be, the log driving company would give notice of the day their drive would start from given points-say at Ridgway on the Clarion-for this company would not, as a rule attempt to go up the small streams for their drive, but would confine themselves to streams at such low rates as will induce, in the having volume of water enough to easily float the largest logs in any ordifarmers of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, nary high water. The "storage" or "booming" need not be at any one place, but might be at a dozen or more, wherever the Clarion or large tributary rivers, within ten or fifteen miles of the mills might favor. From these so low that they will find it impossible booms logs could be loosely rafted and tween his house and residence. D. R. to get along without securing the ad-Kline has one from his residence to that vantages which the farmers in the mill booms, as they were wanted, and older and better cultivated States have according to the marks and ownership. -Fred. For frames and coarse siding deliver each man's logs in the "mill two game roosters fighting until they hemlock is now almost universally booms;" either this could be done as used by those who have access to it. there during the season of sawing, or It, however, is little known through the undertaking on the part of the and other offenses in the County of company could be confined to the booms along the rivers, without underso high a cost, or in such unsightly taking to deliver at the mills. There can be no difficulty in moving logs in Terminer, and General Jail Delivery, the Allegheny anywhere below where the Clarion enters, and somewhere What will be the cost of hemlock from this point to Pittsburgh, no doubt, it would be found expedient to place the mills, which should be at such point on the Allegheny river as can be reached by small steam tugs and flat boats during most or all parts of the summer season. The large trade these mills would build up would justify the strongest competition for their presence. A population as large as Williamsport would result almost immediately from the influence of these mills, for, although the aggregate money value, would be less, the amount of labor to produce it would be quite as great as at the lattercity, and, when we consider the amount of flat boattonnage which would be required to carry this lumber down the river, we may safely assume that this industry would be ample for a new city on the Allegheny.

IS THERE DEMAND FOR THIS LUMBER ! I am credibly informed that new, fresh hemlock lumber, sawed to order. would sell at present for nine dollars per thousand in reasonable quantities, but at six dollars per thousand there would be a much increased demand. The practical questions, in conclusion, are these: Shall the hemlock timber of Northern Pennsylvania, which is now lying in the woods rotting, be sent down the rivers to consumers that will be greatly benefited by receiving it? Shall we give labor to thousands of men now idle? Shall we add five dollars' value to each acre of hemlock forest land of Northern Pennsylvania? Shall we make it possible for the tanner to continue his calling with profit by permitting him to divide the cost of buying and clearing the forest lands with the lumbermen? The hemlock counties of Pennsylvania are among the richest of the State, if her legislators will only appreciate the fact, but the poorest if neglected in the future as in the past. - The National-Greenback-Labor State Committee met at Harrisburg, remote effect of this new method of on Tuesday afternoon, for the purpose handling hemlock upon present mills, of nominating candidates for Judge of thence north 78 and one-half degrees and mill interests? -Beyond supply- the Supreme Court and Lieutenanting the local trade and such inland Governor, Judge Bentley, of Lycoming consumers as can only be reached by county, having declined the former, railroads, these mills at the head wa- and Christopher Shearer, of Berks
