IMPORTANT FACTS.

DR. LEIDY'S Sarsaparilla Blood Pills are applicable in all cases, whether for Purgatives or Purification. They possess all the boasted virtues of other pills, and are additionally efficacious, containing Sarsaparilla in their composition, which is not contained in any other pills in existence. They are also different from other pills in composition, being purely vegetable, and can be employed at all times, without any danger, and requiring no restraint from occupation or usual course of living.

Notwithstanding Dr. Leidy never pretended his Blood Pills would cure all diseases, yet it is not saying too much of them, from the innumerable cures performed by them in every variety and form of disease (certificates of many of which have been published from persons of all denominations, physicians, clergymen, and others) that they seem to be almost universal in their effect; and persons using them for whatever sickness or disease, may rest assured that they will be found more efficacious than any other pills in existence.

From the known reputation of Dr. Leidy's Blood Pill, it is necessary to remind the public where they can at all times procure the genuine, as it is attempted to impose other pills, called the 'Blood Pills' upon the public on the reputation of Dr. Leidy's. ☞ Be particular and ask for Dr. Leidy's Sarsaparilla Blood Pills and see that the name of N. B. Leidy is contained on two sides of each box, (the boxes being of paper, and oblong, square shape, surrounded by a yellow and black label.

PRICE—25 cents a Box.

Prepared only, and sold wholesale and retail, at Dr. Leidy's Health Emporium, 191 North Second street, below Vine, Philadelphia, and by B. A. FAHNSTOCK & CO., corner of Wood and Sixth streets, Agents for Pittsburgh. jy 12—1y

The Daily Morning Post.

A STEAMBOAT COURT.

A northern paper has the following particulars of a court held on a steamer, not long since, over which Judge Lynch presided.

A gentleman of undoubted veracity, has related to us the following novel proceedings, which occurred on board the Queen City, on the Mississippi.

The Queen City had stopped at a woodyard, somewhere below Natchez, when a man of ordinary appearance came on the boat, without bag or baggage, and berthed himself for some "port above." About two o'clock at night, he got up unobserved, and entered the state-room of two gentlemen—and after passing his hand over each to ascertained if they were asleep—of which he was satisfied, from their apparent indifference to his manipulating, he drew a trank from under the birth, and commenced pressing off the lock, with a rugged instrument, called a 'jimmy.' The gentleman in the lower birth sprung upon him, and called to his friend above—they soon had him out and, assisted by the mate, harnessed him with ropes and made him stationary until morning.

After breakfast, a consultation was held as to what disposal should be made of the captive, and a plan was soon adopted. A court was formally organized—consisting of judge, jury, sheriff, attorneys, &c. The prisoner was brought to the bar. The lawyers on board officiated as attorneys—one in the prosecution—the other in the defence. The witnesses were regularly examined, the "jimmy" was produced in court—able speeches made by counsel on each side; the one for defendant acquitting himself in a style and argument not often heard in any of our courts—and the jury sworn "a true verdict to render according to the testimony, retired with the papers."

In about half an hour, they returned with a verdict written as follows—

"We of the jury find the prisoner at the bar GUILTY—and decide that he shall be taken ashore at the first wood-yard, and receive upon his bare back, with the end of a rope, forty lashes save one, and have his head shaved to the skin, whereupon he is to be set at liberty."

The next wood-yard happened to be on an island between Natchez and Vicksburgh. Mr. Whaley, (for such the culprit called himself,) was missing, when the boat stopped. Search was instituted, and a reward was about to be offered "for a fugitive from justice," when he was discovered concealed among the engine machinery, in such a position that one revolution of the wheel would have crush'd him to atoms. He was hauled forth, pinned to a tree, and the verdict fulfilled to the very letter. His back was sorely lacerated by the rope, and his head shaved to the very skin. His condition excited the sympathy of the passengers, and they raised for him a small sum of money "to take him to the next town," and then left him, declaring that the island should ever afterwards be called "Whaley's Island," and that they would never pass it, without thinking of the thief and his "jimmy," and the steamboat court, which the judge thought ought to come under the head of "Nisi Prius," and be an established precedent for all such cases in future.

NOVEL AND MAMMOTH STEAMBOAT.

We see an account in a late London paper of the projected iron steamer there. It is calculated to perform the voyage from Boston to England in 8 or 10 days, at farthest. It is a species of sea-railroad, judging from the description. Here is the statement:

"This boat, named in the patent, from its inventor Mondolian, is nothing more than a large horizontal cylinder, or hollow drum, entirely empty, having from 20 to 30 feet diameter, from 30 to 40 feet in length, constructed in sheet iron, with iron fastnings, and with furnished externally float boards, like an ordinary water wheel. Both the ends of this drum or cylinder are closed, except at the centre, where circular openings or port holes, about six feet in diameter, are left for the purpose of admitting air and light into the interior of the drum. The apparatus is constructed of sufficient dimensions so as to cause the lowest part of the aperture always to be considerably above the surface of the water.

Inside this cylindrical boat, and extending all around it in the form of rings, at equal distances from the two ends, is disposed an endless iron railroad consisting of two rails, on the lower part of which is placed, as on an ordinary railway, a four-wheeled locomotive engine. The movement of this engine when in motion is similar to a squirrel in its cage, thereby making the boat revolve and advance along the surface of the water, the engine itself, however, always remaining in a horizontal position.

The locomotive engine supports a horizontal platform, furnished with about thirty easy chairs and several tables, and other conveniences for the passengers. The fuel and other materials that are required for the engine are contained in receptacles arranged under the flooring. The chimney or flue for conducting the smoke issues through one of the portholes. The iron plates forming the covering of the ends are put together, so as their diameter extends a little beyond the outer edge of the floor boards, which are thus placed, as it were, in a mill course. The space between two consecutive float-boards is thereby enclosed at the ends, thus forming an open box; so that as the vessel revolves the boxes retain the air and carry it with them under the water, and thereby tend to support the vessel; and by thus being held it also prevents the sheet iron which encloses the cylinder from coming in contact with, or resting on the surface of the water; as being supported upon a bed of air, it rests above the water, but the floats or paddles plunge sufficiently in the water, so that its resistance may never permit a movement of rotation without at the same time being accompanied with a movement of place.

By this means, the resistance of friction on the part of water, which the ordinary steamers are obliged to overcome by throwing an immense wave behind them in order that they may advance, is entirely destroyed.

The platform, or flooring placed above the locomotive may be prolonged through the right and the left through both portholes; from each of their extremities the zenith and half the horizon are seen. The vessel is steered by an oar, which projects through one or the other of the portholes. When in use, this oar must be plunged more or less into the water, and by bearing it against the edge of the porthole or opening, it will answer the purpose of a rudder.

The weight of the cargo being placed as ballast in the lowest part of the cylinder, the length of which is equal to once and a half the diameter, the apparatus possesses naturally great stability; and there is never any danger that the most violent transversal wind can make it upset, or even give it an inclination which can disquiet; it can only make it go to leeward; and be sides, as there can be no pitching, there ought to be no sea-sickness.

In case of tempest and the impossibility of navigating, all deviation from the right course and all danger is avoided, as well as all fatiguing rolling; putting her head to the wind, extinguishing the fire and locking the wheels. For greater security, the portholes may be partly closed.

In order to prevent the possibility of getting off the rails the rims of the wheels are hollowed in their middle, in the form of a pully to the depth of three inches. The wheels have the form of two cones, applied base to base to the vertical circumference forming the ring; and the naves, measured between the summits of the cones, and in length equal to the diameter of the wheels, that is to say, from six to eight feet; so that in the greatest rolling there can never be any tendency to overturning them.

The apparatus is furnished with two boilers, so that during the voyage there may be always one, at least, in function, and that, when necessary, a double propelling power may be used. Each corresponds to two cylinders, and imparts a movement on one of the pairs of wheels; it is a double locomotive mounted on four wheels.

At the moment of departure, the quantity of air con-
