For the Farmer.

Renovating Pastures.

Old pastures are often greatly deteriorated in productiveness and quality by the incoming of moss. The lighter the soil the sooner the moss makes its appearance, and the wider the area it occupies. We have known old pastures made nearly unproductive from the growth. So long as the soil is abundantly rich with grass food, moss will not come in; when that begins to fail, a class of plants that drew different elements from the soil—a lower and coaser type of vegetable growth is produced. The best old pastures, those that seem to improve with age, occupy soil that is naturally extremely rich, deep and moist enough to favor the grass. On such favored locations pasture improves with age, because the turf thickens, and the herbage becomes fine and sweet. This process goes on for years—for a lifetime—and people talk of permanent pastures. But the best will fail with age, when the store of plant food is exhausted, unless it be kept good by artificial means. The law of growth, maturity and decay holds with the best pasture as well as with the poorest; only it requires more time to complete the cycle.

The most practical way of renovating, manure and re seed, but as it is not always desirable to take this course, top-dressing may be resorted to as the next best expedient. Strong liquid manure will keep up and improve grass lands, and effectually restrain the growth of moss. For lawns and small patches of pasture this is the best means to adopt. As a dry manure, nitrate of soda is one of the best, because it is readily dissolved and thus placed in the only available form for appropriation by the grass roots, in which any fertilizer can be used by them, and it likewise supplies the needed elements. Farmyard manure, spread on the surface, will force a growth for a single season, but it is not a profitable use for so valuable manure. Fresh earth, or that made from the decay of sods, is one of the most satisfactory dressings to apply to old grass land. The effect of earth alone is remarkable and considering the cost and the benefit this material is most profitable for common use.—American Rural Home.

To CLEAN OIL-CLOTH—If you wish to have them look new and nice, wash them with soft flannel and lukewarm water, and wipe perfectly dry. If you want them to look extra nice, after they are wiped, drop a few spoonful of milk over them, and rub them with a dry cloth.

All horses must not be fed in the same proportion without due regard to their ages, their constitutions and their work. Because the impropriety of such a practice is self-evident.

Leather covered bits should be substituted for metal ones in winter, since the contact of the frosty iron causes ulceration of the horse's mouth.
