THE TERRIBLE CONFLAGRATION AT PARKER CITY ON SATURDAY.

Parker City, Pa., August 17 .- The danger which menaced this place with destruction yesterday now seems to have passed, though after the experiing of security until the last vestiges ering ruins therefore, which still mark by many people who remember that wakened to a realization of the mistake yesterday. Originating by a twenty thousand barrel tank being struck by lightning, the flames spread with the flow of the oil and soon enveloped a wide tract, destroying another tank and several rigs which were within its way. Another tank containing twenty-two thousand barrels was ignited at this time, but it was hoped that the efforts to subdue the flames had succeeded. The terrible devastation of Friday night and yesterday shows how greatly we were mistaken. At half past eight o'clock John Klisorth, O. M. Montgomery. this tank exploded. Workmen had been engaged upon it all the time in the effort to secure its safety, and at J. W. Taylor, J. S. Bordwell, C. D. C. the time of the explosion ten of them | Bowers were upon the top of the tank. They were thrown a distance of thirty feet, and John Clifford, Austin Hines, Wm. Ausiin, D. McMahon and J. McPherson were severely injured by fire and the fall. The burning oil now escaped and made its way down two ravines first day of the next term of the Ordeaths from yellow fever occurred the fall. The burning oil now escaped toward the city, threatening to submerge it, and creating the greatest consternation. The people became panic stricken, rushing wildly through the streets, women and children giving over to crying, screaming and the most abject exhibition of fear and despair. While this condition of affairs prevailed on the streets some one suggested that they make for the hills, which was at once acted upon, and the town was deserted to its fate, not an effort being made to secure any of the personal property. People started off wildly as fleeing from impending death, and the streets were fairly packed with a wild, ungovernable mass of people forcing each other other along toward the safety which the hillside promised. Men dragged their wives, women their little ones, and the greatest confusion prevailed. Those standing on the bluff, and safe from all harm, describe the scene when the river was literally on fire as discontinued and the line is now open one grand beyond human conception and beyond the power of pen to describe. It was awful in its sublimity, and even they were awed and made breathless by the picture. The burning oil toutched the Parker side at a point overhanging Mike's run, threequarters of a mile south, and the flames ran so high that houses located at this point, 300 feet down the river bank, were endangered and were only saved by the application of wet blankets. In half an hour after the oil reached the river it was divided by the current and the fire began to hug both shores, but it had spent its force and all danger to the city had passed by

The oil from this tank set fire to another called the loading tank which contained about 10,000 barrels which added to the fury of the flames. The city was lighted up with the brightness of the sun. Thousands of people from the surrounding country, at tracted by the report of the explosion which was heard for many miles, had assembled in the town and joined the residents in filling the streets. Be sides the destruction by the fire considerable damage was inflicted by the explosion. Pieces of iron were thrown in every direction, some to a distance five feet five inches long and having of three miles, and the windows along remnants of the tank and the scorched the fearful conflagration, but the which threatened them will need no monument to make the memory of

The loss will reach $100,000, and will be felt principally by the united lines. It is rumored that two of the men hurt by the explosion have died, but the rumor cannot be traced to any re-Chalfant tank touched the river it caused a wave of water three feet bank, raising boats high and dry upon the shore. Forty feet of the Allegheny Valley railroad were washed away by the oil, and passengers had to be transferred from one train to the other, and by boats to the Parker side to make connections with the Parker and Karns City line.
