of the term, although I am opposed to slavery in the abstract, and further than that, I am opposed to the extension of slavery into our new territories—but I can see that the bill now before Congress, known as Senator Douglas's bill, in reference to the Nebraska territory does not effect. I did not intend to participate in the meeting at the Court House. I happened in the town on business and was called on to take a seat as Vice President, and did so without knowing what the object or design of the meeting was, and for that I do not believe myself responsible.

The Washington Star says that the three sons of Washington, who were persuaded by motives of humanity, to become sureties for Mr. Chapman, have been sued, judgement obtained against them, execution issued and levy made. We have heard of contributions solicited by Methodists, and of money paid in Scotland and elsewhere for the Chaplin fund, and asks: Where, Pray, was his jail? Selby Parker, David A. Hall and Wm. Ranchard, of Washington city, are the sureties above alluded to. It asserts that the money raised north and abroad has not been applied to them.

Extraordinary cure for Salt Rheum and Erysipelas combined.

MARTHA'S VINEYARD, MASS., May 8th, 1852.

MR. WEAVER—Dear Sir,—This may certify that for several years, I have been afflicted with a humor which resulted in a severe form of the Erysipelas. About two years ago it began with the usual burning and stinging sensation, appeared in different parts of the body, but has been most on my face, once producing blindness from extreme swelling and with great soreness and pain; at the same time my limbs became swollen and eventually a raw sore, covered the entire foot, discharging a watery substance with a scalding sensation. For six months I was under treatment with great pain, even with two physicians—they pronounced that both Salt Rheum and Erysipelas were in my case. During the first stages of the disease I found some temporary relief from using Sarsaparilla, but it would return with more force and the same result followed. Some time in the latter part of last June, my husband came home one morning, as he was going from home, saying that I can get for you that you think can help me. I was about discouraged and feel that I must have a Physician for help and submit to his will, for everything I tried have utterly failed. My husband brought home one of your agents that a few days before had been discovered and prepared especially for such cases. He returned and brought me one of your bottles of Bitters, I read with great interest because it described my case as my own which had been cured. My faith in the virtues of your medicines as providentially made known to me I feel grateful to the Great Physician and to you whose hopes have been wonderfully realized. I have continued using your Compound Syrup of Sarsaparilla, strictly according to directions, and have noticed its cleansing effects, and some time since I felt myself cured, and am able to walk about and attend to my duties without pain except what results from the exertion of bending over from the waist, which is now gaining strength. I feel the highest confidence in your medicines and cheerfully recommend them to every one with similar diseases, and would gladly answer any inquiries such sufferers verbally, which cannot be done by letter.

MARGARET COFFILE.

Also—Geo. D. Coffile, of Chilmark, Mass.—Mrs. Prudence Dennison, and Mrs. Anna Vincent.

I would further say that her general health was good before taking the medicine. 4t40.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

Our mild address, in peace abounding,
And free from every cause of wounding,
Has been attacked in ruffian manner;
And rudest form with tongs and hammer.
Our neighbor hints, in terms quite haughty.
To boast and vaunt is very naughty;
The fact is plain, the proof is ample,—
He shows it by a fair example:
The boy that stole the cheese and pie
Is the first to say it was I.
The fashions which our neighbor "leads,"
The oldest fogy only heeds;
They're easy led, they're old and tame,
His predecessors led the same.
And what he says of feet that sits,
We own is feet beyond our wits.
But when he comes to change his metre,
He gives it so abstruse a feature,
Our intellect at once takes spasm
In depths we wholly fail to fathom,
The rhyming art is not degraded
Where common sense is thus invaded.
We'll tell the people far and wide
The cause why Cotter left Cheapside.
For one so honest and so trusting,
He found his place was too disgusting.
Our neighbor boasts of one more tasty—
To give his name he's not so hasty.
Now let us caution you to care,
When you approach the "hive" beware
For poisonous sweets are sometimes found
And stings the innocent to wound.
Yet with this fact you may be flattered,
Their leader's gone, the workers scattered.
And though they hum in boldest tones,
There's nothing left but buzzing drones.

WILCOX & NORTON.

P. S.—Our vaunting friend again appears,
And fairly shows his full length ears,
We've drawn him out, his tones are fine,
The Ears stick out at every line. W. & N.

Erie, March 7, 1854. No. 10, Brown's Block.

Boots and Shoes.

Our neighbor, in for fame and glory,
Has told a sorry sort of a story,
And 'tis a most surprising thing
To see how stupid drones can sting,
Poking his long stick in our hive,
He's found the busy mass alive,
And in his vain attempts for honey,
Has met a fate that's not so funny.
Defeated in his purpose foul,
The Bees have made old Bruin growl,
And picking up his "feet that sits,"
He rubs the place whore should be wits.
The truth's as old as Noah's ark,
The smallest puppies loudest bark;
And "babies of the smallest size,"
Will often raise ferocious cries.
Well—should the little babies squeal
Another and another peal,
Just pat them gently on the back,
Give them a little Hobensack,
Or leather tea is very good,
For those just out of babyhood.

The people cry—Deveau's! Deveau's!!
That is the place for Boots and Shoes'
This fact is stranger far than fiction,
And will not suffer contradiction,
And now our neighbor's intellect
Will "take a spasm" we suspect.

MORAL.

Beware the Bear when in a spasm;
He tells us that he often has 'em,
And if you would not meet your ruin.
For mercy's sake, don't go near Bruin.

Erie, March 9, 1854. S. DEVEAU,
No. 5, Cheapside.

Boots and Shoes.

Again we come in measured rhymes,
But change the theme as change the times.
The Rhythm Railroad we have gone and
And peace has to her throne ascended;
And quickly with returning peace
Let every bitter passion cease.
And cultivate a spirit kind.
No malice secreted, noble mind.
Throw by the boots by service battered,
A little old and somewhat shattered,
And call again at number ten.
You know the place you'll find the men;
Willean will still on you with pleasure,
And Cotter's there to take your measure.
He left Cheap-ide,—no matter when,
And stops at Brown's Block number ten.
And when he's fairly fixed your feet,
He'll make a boot that can't be beat.
He needs in verse no fame or glory,
To call him Cotter, tells the story.
Young men with intellects expanding,
Frown with Boots your understanding;
Or if the Gaiters better please,
Consult your tastes, consult your ease
The Congress forms with variations
Diversified in their relations;
May better meet your expectations,
And satisfy your inclinations.
Come Ladies come, or send your waiters,
And find as nice a pair of Gaiters
As ever graced a Lady's foot,
Of texture fine or fashion neat,
Morocco Bootees, Buskins Slips,
Some plain, some patent leather tips,
Enameled work with clinches bad,
And some of the finest of French Kid.
The Misses too with modest pride,
Will find the means their feet to hide,
In fancy colors, free from harm,
Without suppressing even a charm.
We've Shoes which Boys and Girls suffice.
And Babies of the smallest size,
The goods we've had to order made,
Designed for our specific trade,
In ponderous piles approach our doors,
In heaps on heaps and scores on scores.
Doubt not the choicest goods are there.
They open rich and even rare,
And though our speech may seem quite bold,
You'll find the half has not been told.

WILCOX & NORTON.

Erie, Feb. 25, 1854—41. No. 10 Brown's Block, State st.

BOOTS & SHOES.

Although the "Erie war has ended,
And peace has to her throne ascended,"
You'll find that rhyming without reason,
Is not befitting any season;
To boast and vaunt is not our part,
And thus degrade the rhyming art;
We only tell you what is true
About the firm of S. Deveau.
We lead the fashions all must know,
While others follow, sure but slow.
"Cotter" 'tis true, has left "cheapside,"
But still his place is well supplied
By one more tasty and more neat,
Who's always ready at his seat,
And when your feet to measure sits,
You may be sure he'll "give them fits"
While mingling elegance with ease.
We know he cannot fail to please.
No more to Philadelphia go,
To Lynn, New York, or Buffalo,
Nor yet to "Brown's Block number ten,
To find why Cotter left, or when,"
For here at Cheapside, number five,
You'll find an active busy hive
Of workmen skilled, of workmen handy,
Who never fail to fit the foot.
At leisure you our stock can view
Of every quality and hue,
And gratify the ruling passion,
Of always being in the fashion;
For when a pretty foot you view,
The reason is ('twixt me and you,)
Not "in your eye" but in the shoe,
So neatly made by S. Deveau.
Hoping kind friends that we may meet,
In boots and shoes we'll act your pleasure,
And though our measures fail in feet,
Your feet shall never fail in measure;
Come on, we say, come one and all,
And give your friend Deveau a call.
