CHILDHOOD'S WRONGS.—A writer in the New York Independent gives the following account of the painfully discordant sounds which are to be heard in the Christian City of New York in a midsummer night:

It was my ill-fortune to be obliged to spend several of the hottest weeks of last summer in New York. Within near neighborhood of my rooms were blocks of buildings occupied by stores on the first floor and by tenements above. In these lived the families of small tradesmen and mechanics of the better order. During those scorching nights every window was thrown open, and all sounds were borne, with great distinctness, through the hot, still air. Chiefest among them were the shrieks and cries of little children, and blows and angry words from tired and over-worked mothers; at times it became almost unbearable; it was hard to refrain from a wild attempt at rescue; ten, twelve, twenty sharp, hard blows, whose sound rang out plainly, I counted again and again; and mingling with them the convulsive screams of the poor children, and the most piteous thing of all, the reiteration of "Oh, mamma! Oh, mamma!" as if through all the helpless little creatures had an instinct that the word ought to be, in itself, the strongest appeal. These families were all the better class of work-people, comfortable and respectable.—What sounds were to be heard during those nights in the really wretched haunts of the city the heart struggled away from fancying. But the shrieks of those children, those babies, will never wholly cease in the air; ever since then the question has been ringing in my ears, "why does not the law protect children, before the point at which life is endangered?" If a cartman can be arrested in the streets for brutal beating of a horse, which his is own by right of purchase, and which he can kill, for sake of hide and hair, any day that he so chooses, ought not a man or a woman to be at least as severely dealt with for the cruel wipping of a child, who is not theirs, but God's, and the taking whose life by one blow is murder?

THE CULVER FAILURE excitement has been revived in the oil region, by the effort of Congress to take Mr. Culver from prison, and as an M. C, and by the appearance of a letter from Culver himself, in which he seeks to palliate the crime of his failure by asserting that it was the result of a combination of circumstances in business which neither he or others connected with him could control. It is hardly possible that the difficulties of that unfortunate failure can be satisfactorily settled by criminating letters between the parties involved. The courts must adjudicate the affair.

THE NATIONAL BANKS are to be placed under the inspection of a person or persons to be appointed by the Controller of the Treasury, whose duty it shall be thoroughly to examine into the affairs of such institutions and report them to the Secretary of the Treasury.

APPLICATION having been made for the additional bounty by a soldier who had lost his discharge, the proper accounting officer decides that the law forbids the payment of the claim, and that in such cases, however hard it may operate, no authority is vested in any officer of the Government to dispense with a condition which the law has imposed. The fourteenth section of the act of July 28. 1866, referred to says, "That no claim for such bounty shall be entertained by the Paymaster General, or other accounting officer, except upon the receipt of the claimant's discharge papers."

J. C. Fremont proposes to himself the United States Senatorship from Missouri.

The Doylestown Intelligencer suggests Hon. M. Russell Thayer as a compromise candidate for U. S. Senator.

THE POTTER COUNTY JOURNAL

Coudersport, Tuesday Evening. Dec. 18, 1866.

Local and General.

☞ One of the silly expressions used by the advocates of Gov. Curtin for the United States Senate, is, "he has sacrificed the six best years of his life for his State and Country." To give that as a reason for his further promotion is simply ridiculous. If he has "sacrificed" so many years his friends should take care that he does not sacrifice any more. If being Governor of the great Keystone State is a sacrifice, what would six years in the United States Senate be considered? If he thought his position demanded too much of his time and energies, why did he repudiate his pledges and become a candidate for a second term. Surely others could have been found who would have performed the duties equally well and not considered it a "sacrafice." It is an ungrateful expression and an insult to the people who voted for him.

There is one thing connected with Governor Curtin's adminstration which is not forgotten—Every time he went to Washington during the Rebellion, to wrangle with the President about the course the National Administration was pursuing he had it telegraphed all over the country that he had gone there in the interests of the Soldiers. Now there is no question about the fact of his having taken a great interest in the Soldiers, as did thousands of others who remained at home, and while we are willing to accord him all the credit he deserves for the part he acted in the great drama, we are not willing to concede that because he did his duty the people of Pennsylvania must keep him in office for the length of his natural life. And it is an equally notorious fact that he gave President Lincoln more trouble than the Governor of any other loyal State. The investigation of a man's past acts is the surest mode of determining his future course, and a hasty glance at the course pursued by Gov. Curtin since his re-election will convince us that there are reasons why he should not be the next United States Senator. It was a fact notorious at the time that for a long time after the nomination of Gen. Geary he was claimed by both the Clymerites and Johnson men. A gentleman of unblemished character and veracity, and a relative of the Governor's, told us as late as April 26th that it was very doubtful if he remained true to our party, and that he was very much worried about him. The Republican party did not trust him six months ago, and we consider it a surprising instance of forgetfulness that he should now be seriously thought of as a candidate of that party for anything, much less for a position which will require six long and momentous years of trial. We can understand how men who were almost bankrupt six years ago, and are now reckoned as millionaires, by reason of the "close corporation," at Harrisburg, should be interested; and we have some charity for those who believe he really means to be a Republican, but that the intelligent leaders of a party should for a moment countenance his demand for the Senate is truly surprising. Like many popular leaders he has always endeavored to keep back the real issue, and cover with glittering generalities his opinion of men and things. We challenge any one to produce a single expression from his messages, letters or speeches, that would justly place him in the ranks of progressive Republicans. We all remember his special Message on Arbitrary Arrests, in which he came very nearly up to the full measure of Copperhead grumbling. We remember that the Democrats in the Legislature endorsed him, and that bodies largely composed of Democrats, passed, unanimously, resolutions favoring his course. We never heard from his lips a Radical Republican expression until he discerned that the Blairs had defeated his attempt to secure the French Mission. He has never been a Republican in the true sense of the term.—Never taken the position of such men as Stevens, Cameron, or Forney. He has been conservative in act, word and deed. That he is popular, no one will deny. None understand better than he does, how to gain the public eye and ear, and how to keep them when gained. He is a wonderful popular orator—approaching very nearly the line of such men as Clay. He has the gifts of a fine personal appearance, a smooth tongue, an impressive manner, and fortune has favored him with a position at a time in our history calculated to give him great control of the popular sympathy, but under it all he has a coldness of heart, and a selfishness of purpose that impress all who become intimately acquainted with him, and as he is not the only candidate in the field it might be well to consider these truths, and weigh them well. We do not wish to do Gov Curtin any injustice, but are opposed to the election of any but an undoubted radical. We want no more Cowan's, Dixon's or Doolittle's. Let us take warning from the past!

☞ Our subscribers have not paid very general attention to the "dunning letters." We want it understood that we really mean what we say. AFTER THE FIRST OF JANUARY THE JOURNAL MUST BE PAID FOR IN ADVANCE.—A few days ago we heard of a man joking about having received the JOURNAL for two or three years without paying for it. This very man begged of us to send it because of his wife and children, and said that he would surely pay us some day We do not know how many more such there may be, and intend by asking pre-payment hereafter, to prevent a repetition of the kindness. As we ask the same terms of all—we do not see how any can reasonably find fault.

— California is in trouble about her taxes. Her currency is in gold, but in paying tax upon incomes they are first reduced to the greenback standard. As this fluctuates day by day, the people are all in a fog about it, and the newspapers call it an "outrage."

— Mr. Seward and the President, it is said, differ in their foreign policies, and the Secretary disclaimed to M. de Montholon any responsibility for the language of the Message in regard to the action of France.

The Atlantic for January.

The ATLANTIC MONTHLY enters on its nineteenth volume with an array of distinguished names and sterling articles that promise well for the coming year. The January number contains the first instalment of Dr. Holmes's story, "The Guardian Angel," in which will be found the same old charm that so fascinated the readers of the AUTOCRAT, the PROFESSOR, and ELSIE VENNER; a humorous story in verse, by James Russell Lowell; a graphic sketch of Henry Ward Beecher's church, with some pertinent reflections upon modern church-going, by James Parton; a legion in verse, told only as Whittier can tell it; a poem entitled "Terminus," (on Growing Old,) by R. W. Emerson; a spirited and faithful translation of the contest between Achilles and Agamemnon from the First Book of the Iliad, by W. C. Bryant—Mr. Higginson contributes a Plea for Culture; Mr. Trowbridge furnishes another of his attractive stories under the title, The Man who stole a Meeting-House; Bayard Taylor tells a characteristic story of The Strange Friend; Mr. Shanly gives a humorous sketch of Capilary Freaks; E. C. Stedman offers a Poem on Pan in Wall Street; and Walter Mitchell describes the Kingdom of Infancy. The story of Katherine Morne, by the author of "Herman," is continued. Topics of current political interest are thoroughly treated,—the Causes for which a President can be Impeached are lucidly set forth, and Frederick Douglass makes a powerful Appeal to Congress for Impartial Suffrage. The number closes with notices of several popular new publications.

☞ As winter is rapidly approaching and fires will become more numerous, see to it that your buildings are insured. Call at the JOURNAL OFFICE AGENCY. Policies issued in the best Companies of the country at fair rates.

☞ Farmers who have large barns with their summers' crop in them, will do well to see that they are Insured. No one who exercises common discretion will refuse to insure at this season of the year. Don't wait until it is too late, and then say: "I meant to be insured." Procrastination not only steals time, but very often both time and money.
