THE CIRCUS MAN'S STORY.

The younger of the three men, insisting that they must have something on him before they left, called the waiter and, slipping a 50-cent piece into his hand, told him to draw three "long ones" and keep the change.

The three of them laughed and joked as though they had known each other for years, although it was the first time they had met. They called each other "brother" and, pointing to the little pins that each wore, declared that they all had something to be proud of.

The young fellow who had ordered was covertly watching the waiter, and, seeing him coming back with the "long ones" and with a most serious face, turned to the others and laughed.

"I knew he would come back with that money," he said. "I have been trying to get rid of it for the past three months." The waiter explained that the half dollar was a counterfeit and suggested politely that the young man might have another piece of money about him.

"Counterfeit, eh?" the young fellow laughed, innocently. "Is that so? Well, here's a dollar that is all right."

"I'm not in that kind of business, you needn't fear," he said, soberly, after the waiter had left, "but I hate to throw it away. Funny, how some things stick to you, isn't it?"

The large man with the florid features and the florid necktie laughed at this.

"Reminds me," he said, reminiscently, "of something I tried to get shed of when I was in the circus business. The thing was a good-for-nothin' little red and gilded chariot that we used in our pony chariot race."

"My name's Sloan," he went on. "I'm in the vaudeville business with Sloan's celebrated trick dogs. Well, in the summer time I'm on the road as manager of Sloan's Mammoth Circus and Hippodrome, and in the winter I make a livin' with my dogs.

"My headquarters are in St. Louis, and in May we crossed the river, our route takin' us on a bee line west as far as Flora, where it turned south and worked down to Cairo.

"One star feature was our monkeys—monkeys drivin' ponies to chariots. One of our chariots began to look a little rusty, and as we was doin' a pretty fair business I had another one made, intendin' to throw away the old feller.

"We threw it into a ditch just outside of Sandoval, a little town perhaps 70 miles out of St. Louis, believin' that some farmer lad would be glad to get it, but the next day the kid brought the thing back, allowin' that we'd ought to pass him in free for his trouble. The next day we were to show in Salem, and I says to Bill Hayes, one of our drivers: 'Bill, throw that darned cart into some bushes some place where nobody'll see it until we get far enough away.'

"Bill did as he was told, but, by Hank, when we showed up in Salem next day, that cart came back to us, by another freckled-faced farmer boy, who also 'lowed he'd ought to get in free.

"Funny we didn't think of givin' it away, but, anyhow, we didn't, havin' it in mind that no one would want it, so I tells Bill the second time to ditch it. 'Break it up and set it on fire,' I says to Bill.

"The next day we showed in Iuka. We showed and made a fine haul—and our pony chariot came back. Yep, that's what it did. Seen it first, way down the road, bumpin' along behind a farmer's wagon. The jay hunted me out in the crowd and allowed that fer bein' so kind as to bring back the cart that he and his family had oughter get in free. There were seven of 'em in that family. Seven 50-cent pieces—enough to buy two pony chariots.

"The jay paid to get in, and we told him to take away the cart, if he'd promise to hide it for a couple of weeks, until we could get out of the road, but he must have forgot it, because that night, when we silently folded our tents, preparin' to steal away, we found that confounded chariot in the horse tent. I hunted out Bill.

"'Bill, I says, 'you get an ax and smash up that chariot, and if it ever comes back again you'll git fired.'

"'Boss,' says Bill, 'I most solemnly swear that I lit a fire to that thing and saw the varnish a-bubblin' on it before I left it.' For proof he pointed out the scorched portion and then, to satisfy me, he got a hammer and knocked off the wheels, kicked off the tongue and splintered the sides of it. Then he gathered up the pieces and threw them into a bush. 'That settled it,' the circus man said, conclusively. 'It never came back again.'

"No," he said, "that chariot never came back to us, but when we reached Flora I got this letter that had been following us along the road from Iuka. I'll read it.

"'Manager Sloan's Circus,'" he read. "'Dear Sir: The day after your circus showed in our town, Iuka, the undersigned found a small chariot, like the one used in the monkey race, layin' in the vacant lot, where the circus tent was. It was pretty badly smashed up, and, takin' it home my son, who is a carpenter, fixed it up. It is as good as new, and, bellevin' that you lost it by mistake, and that it was highly valued by you, I wish to state that if you send five dollars to cover the expenses of shippin' and the material used in fixin' it, I will send it back. Respectfully yours,

"HENRY GREENFIELD."

The large man's face grew florid, almost as florid as his necktie.

"Say, now, what do you think of that?" he said.—Chicago Record-Herald.

A STRINGENT ORDER

A new order from the postoffice department is going to make trouble for some persons who are careless about opening letters intended for others. It is now a punishable offense for anyone to open a letter addressed to another, subjecting the offender to a fine of $200. Formerly this carelessness was excused by writing on the envelope "opened by mistake," and returning the letter to the postoffice. Under the new order of things persons receiving mail from the office must examine it before leaving the room and mail not belonging to them must be returned to the postmaster unopened. The law makes no allowance for the postmaster delivering it to the wrong person, nor for the party who thoughlessly carries the letter home or opens it before being sure of its being for him. Business men must be to the inconvience of examining their large bundles of mail before leaving the room or lay themselves liable to $200 fine. It may be possible that there was call for such a stringent order but to the average person it seems unreasonable, and it will open the door for fines on letters of but trivial consequence.

Favor Tariff Reciprocity.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., June 23.—At the session of the national convention of flour millers in Milwaukee a strongly worded resolution in favor of tariff reciprocity with all countries was adopted. The convention selected St. Louis as the place of meeting next year. The millers closed their three days' meeting with a banquet.

Permanent Dentistry

A quarter of a century ago we placed some gold fillings in the teeth of a well known gentleman at present a resident of Sayre. These fillings today are just as bright, firm and useful as the day they were made. We will tell you the name of the party, if you wish to see him yourself.

There are variations in dental workmanship, just as there are differences in the various brands of flour. If you desire the highest degree of proficiency—the skill and knowledge that will make YOUR fillings serviceable twenty five years from today—come in or 'phone for an appointment. On the other hand, if you take pleasure in having your teeth filled over and over again every year or two, you should go elsewhere—we do not do that kind of work.
