"Joshing" the Newly Married.

The jokes played on newly married couples are many and some not altogether to be commended. But the Louisville Courier-Journal tells of one that certainly caused a large amount of innocent merriment. Passengers on a Monon train bound for Louisville had a jolly time at the expense of a newly married couple on a recent afternoon. When the train reached Salem, Ind., a nicely dressed young man entered the first coach and passed a mysterious looking envelope to each passenger. Everybody wondered whether the envelope contained the latest gold brick scheme or whether it was an invitation to a church fair. Some fellow braced up courage and opened the envelope, and this is what met his gaze:

MISS BETTIE WILSON,
MR. ARTHUR STOUT.

MARRIED—At Salem, Ind., this afternoon, Miss Bettie Wilson to Mr. Arthur Stout. The newly wedded couple are on this train, en route to the Pan-American, the Green mountains and other eastern points. Being young and bashful, passengers are kindly requested to notice them and see that they are put off at Buffalo.

While the cards were being distributed the newly-married couple boarded the train. Everybody held up the "invitations," but it was not until after they were seated that the bride and groom became aware of the joke friends had played. They entered into the spirit of the fun, however, and the passengers made it "warm" for them until Louisville was reached.

The Locust Tree and Lightning.

Is a locust tree more likely to be struck by lightning than other trees? Farmers in western Pennsylvania and Ohio will answer "yes," and will cite any number of instances in their neighborhood where such trees have been splintered by lightning when other varities have escaped. So strong is this belief in the rural regions, says an official paper, that people are warned not to take shelter under a locust during a thunder shower. The tree is planted, too, in groves 100 feet or more from houses and farm buildings, under the impression that it draws the lightning, and thus protects the buildings. In the rural mind the locust is better than a lightning rod. This extensive planting of the locust probably explains why it is so often hit by lightning. The tree has many good qualities, aside from its fancied one as a lightning arrester, and it has become so frequent in Ohio and western Pennsylvania that the lightning cannot well help striking it.

A Mr. Fletcher, of New Orleans, who lately returned from Europe, thinks that of all the American girls who have married titled foreigners Gen. Fred Grant's daughter seems to have been the most fortunate. Prince Cantacuzene has an unquestioned social position in all the continental European capitals that his wife shares with him as do very few wives of American birth. Very many of the latter, when it comes to court functions and ceremonials, fare little if any better than do morganatic wives. As a granddaughter of Gen. Grant Princess Cantacuzene finds every door open to her. Her famous grandfather is the one American that all Europe knows, and the only one they recognize as anything like the equal in every way of the reigning families of the world.

In a case of park kissing, a Springfield (Mo.) judge has just decided that "it is no crime for a man to kiss a lady if she is willing; that the kissing cannot disturb the peace of anyone, so long as it is conducted in a gentlemanly manner and with reasonable moderation." The young people of Springfield will look upon this judge as a Solomon, and perhaps he is one. They may kiss in moderation in the parks before marriage; after marriage they may not kiss at all.

Without making any claims for or against exercise, an investigator who has taken the pains to examine into the age at which eminent men die, found that moral philosophers, astronomers, statesmen and clergymen of the highest or more contemplative class, philanthropists, literary men of independent means and others whose lives were not likely to be marked by any excessive degree of muscular activity have generally had the longest lives.

"Tattooing is very popular among criminals," said one of the wardens of the eastern penitentiary. "Probably three-fourths of the convicts here have ink designs of some sort on their body or limbs. The characters are varied and curious — anchors, ships, tombstones, animals, mottoes, figures of women, and even flowers and buildings are seen. This tattooing is very useful, often, in the identification of a criminal."

The advantages of a made-to-order family tree, says the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post, is that the ancestors composing it will always bear inspection, whereas those from real life are often such as one would not care to have one's children associate with.

A recent report says that three of the best athletes in Princeton are to be dropped from their classes because of a failure to pass their examinations. Brawn is a desirable thing to cultivate, but the brain must not be entirely forgotten.
