GOVERNMENT BY VETO.

Extraordinary Power Assumed by Governor Pattison.

Phila. Evening Star.

The New York Recorder has some pregnant remarks upon the course of Governor Pattison in vetoing such a large number of the measures passed by the Legislature and submitted to him at the close of the session for his approval. These animadversions come swift upon the commendations of the Governor by the Ledger, the Times, the Telegraph and other newspapers miscellaneous in their political sympathies. These journals would lead us to suppose that the Governor had saved the state from an avalanche of bad legislation, and that but for the serene wisdom of the Governor, inaccessible and secure on its Alpine heights of virtue, there is no knowing what disaster might have befallen. The Recorder, however, takes another view, and says:

"Conditions may unhappily arise when a Governor is justified in applying to legislation the lesson learned in the shambles. But no such condition exists in Pennsylvania, nor at this time in any other American state. The veto power has been given to the Executive as a sacred right, or special privilege, to be sparingly used, to correct errors into which even the most prudent assemblies might fall, and not that the Executive should be the master of the Legislature."

There is force in the argument that when executive interference is necessary to suppress the will of the people as expressed by their representatives something is wrong. Governor Pattison is one man, entirely fallible, without extraordinary capacity, of fair but limited experience, and who in the consideration of legislation submitted for his approval has had neither the advantages of debate nor of the reports of committees, nor of such information as always goes before legislative assemblies, nor of an interchange of views with the members—many of them specialists, nor of the machinery and processes of development out of which legislation matures. To take it for granted that any executive, his mind burdened with many duties, can in a few hours sweep through a mass of legislation, killing here and there, and make no mistakes, is absurd. Such a power—like that of slaying the innocents at the Passover—was never intended in any representative form of government. If we adopt it in Pennsylvania we may as well abolish the system and intrust all power to the Governor.

The veto was intended as a legislative corrective, to be sparingly used; really a sacred power only to be invoked in times of emergency. Laws passed under a misapprehension of facts, or under some impulse of passion, or marred by flagrant, unperceived error, of course invite and should receive the veto. For such contingencies the veto was provided. Moreover, an occasion may arise, as during the mania for inflation, when a really great and intrepid President like Grant, may save the national credit. Such instances are rare indeed, but they were wisely contemplated by the veto, and in every instance when thus invoked its exercise was commendable. Sometimes, as was seen under Jackson, Tyler, and more especially Johnson, it becomes a weapon of offense as against a dissident legislature, and then invariably leads to public scandal and injury to the state. But the veto was never intended to be an instrument of vanity or a political agency in the hands of an executive. So abused, it paralyzes legislation, by submitting it to the caprice of the executive, or by destroying in the minds of self-respecting representatives any desire for legislation or debate. What reasonable man with work to do at home, no matter how ambitious to serve the state, will care to spend his time in Harrisburg enacting measures, only to see them sponged out in a few saucy sentences of "Executive reasons" in the form of "a veto" by an ambitious Governor ever brooding over the Presidency?

Now is there anything in the record of Governor Pattison to justify the people in clothing him with this autocratic, Olymrian power? We should have grudged it to Washington or Lincoln, and why concede it to him? Governor Pattison's political history is that of an earnest Democratic partisan, who having won every step of preferment by Republican support is now an uncompromising Democrat. His chief counsellor is the leading Democratic party manager in the state, a man who marked his administration of the Post Office by the Robespierrean policy of sending his opponents to the guillotine. Mr. Wright, the newly selected Treasurer, applies the same methods to his office. We do not especially complain of this. These men are Jacksonians, and believe in the Jacksonian maxim, detestable as it is, that to the victors belong the spoils. Nor have we any grievance with Pattison. We rather like the young Governor, with his many engaging qualities. We simply want him to rank where he belongs, as an ambitious, audacious Democratic politician, bent on his own advancement, and to that end constructing a political machine as effective as that of Hill in New York, and Gorman in Maryland. We are likewise anxious that the most sacred function of the Executive, namely, the veto power shall not be made an element of political ambition at the sacrifice of legislative independence.

The duties of the Governor are executive. Nor can we help thinking that if the mind of Governor Pattison had been more upon them than upon the destruction of legislation; if he had thought more of enforcing the law than of vetoing them, much of the present financial scandal might have been avoided. Governor Pattison went to Harrisburg well informed of the inside workings of the City Treasury, of the condition of the Keystone Bank. He knew how city treasurers earned a hundred thousand a year. He knew that the state money was in peril, because of the influences which governed our finances. A bank president, the one thing which would have been expected of Governor Pattison the moment he reached Harrisburg was the taking of such measures as would either have secured the state money or exposed the evil methods which brought it into peril. Not until the Mayor and District Attorney had lain hands upon the Treasurer was a word said from Harrisburg. This may be called an extreme criticism, but Governor Pattison and his friends invite it, when they call upon us to commend this mound of slaughtered legislation at Harrisburg and the Times, Ledger and Telegraph are parading with bands of music to celebrate the triumph of the Veto Power at the expense of legislation.

If we are to have government by unlimited, irresponsible veto, let us go further and have government by autocracy. Better no Legislature at all than a Legislature of weaklings afraid to speak their mind. Moreover this abuse of the veto, this handling of it for political ends, will destroy it. The emergency may come when the credit of the state must be maintained against socialism; when state franchises must be preserved against rasping monopolies; when partisanship may run wild. Why weaken, therefore, so sacred an agency? We believe in the veto, but we do not believe in the government by veto. We believe in trenchant remedies when occasion serves, but that does not mean a daily regime of drastic medicines. We believe in all the powers of the state—the judicial, the legislative, the right of pardon, of calling out the troops, of the veto. But they are sacred, to be used tenderly and with care, as they may save and serve the state and not as instruments of personal ambition and party gain.
