BELL BUILDINGS IN PENNSYLVANIA WOULD MAKE A TELEPHONE CITY

Buildings owned by the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania.

If all the buildings owned by the Bell System were grouped together, quite a business community would be the result. These buildings which are located in every section of the state are used principally for switchboards and other equipment, central offices and for business offices. They are constructed and situated in such a way as to efficiently serve the public in each locality.

Future requirements are carefully taken into consideration before the construction of these buildings. So that for some years after the structures have been erected there is room for enlarging the equipment to take care of additional telephones.

This year nearly 80,000 new telephones are being added in Pennsylvania and to serve these new telephones twenty-two new buildings are being constructed and thirty of the buildings in the above picture are being greatly enlarged.

Nearly a million dollars' worth of equipment is being installed in these buildings every month. At the end of this year approximately $30,000,000 in equipment will have been added in Pennsylvania. This is the largest telephone construction program ever attempted in one year.

With these figures one can easily understand that the little telephone instrument which is so frequently used, is but a small part of the telephone plant, when it is compared with the tremendous amounts of real estate, buildings, switchboards, and other equipment which are necessary to the telephone service.

A Train Sixty Miles Long

We're adding to the Bell System in Pennsylvania this year $6,300,000 in new land and buildings.

And in 1924 we expect that the requirements will call for nearly eight millions more.

Into these and our other buildings and along the wire-ways of the state, we're installing in 1923 new telephone equipment which would require a train sixty miles long to haul.

In starting this train, the locomotive would travel a half a mile before the caboose was in motion.

This staggering amount of new switchboards, new cable, poles, wire and thousands of other necessary materials will be added to the Bell System in this state this year. More than thirty millions of dollars will be spent to meet the telephone demand in Pennsylvania.

Never before have such enormous quantities been added in so short a time.
