Garbage Sterilization

By Pennsylvania News Service

Harrisburg—The days of grace are a thing of the past for commercial feeders of garbage to swine.

The State Department of Agriculture this week ordered a crack-down on enforcement of a 1953 law which requires the sterilization of all collected garbage fed to swine.

The grace period was permitted so that proper equipment could be installed. As of now, agents are to check garbage-feeding premises and where noncompliance has been noted, a deadline is to be set.

CARE FOR LAMBS

The good sheepman is ready for the new-born lambs when they arrive, says Thomas King, Penn State extension livestock representative. He has warm, dry quarters for winter lambing. The first few days in a lamb's life are critical. A lamb's chance for survival is usually high after a week if it is healthy.
