Donna Anthony returned from the Philippines. She told of an extreme shortage of books in that nation, sometimes two textbooks passing among forty students. The Philippines are getting on their own feet after 400 years of Spanish rule, followed by American domination. The country is now in a crash program of agricultural improvement, since most of the people are subsistence farmers.

Students go to school only ten years, as opposed to our twelve, she said, but they learn three languages. There is a siesta of two hours at lunchtime for everybody.
