> English agricultural interests are said to be at a lower ebb than was ever known before. Farmers are everywhere either throwing up their leases in sheer despair or demanding renewals for long terms at rates so low that landlords pre fer to have the land thrown on their hands rather than consent. One chief cause of this hopelessness is said to be the impossibility of making head against American competition. That there may be other influences at work to aid it may be inferred from a little incident we find related of a late grand battue on Lord Aveland's estate, in which the Prince of Wales participated. Four thousand head of game were killed by the noble sportsmen, valued at $2,250. But, according to the estimate of an old farmer, the value of the produce destroyed in recring and feeding the same game was $50,000. This is not very profitable business for anybody concerned

Days Without Nights.

There is nothing that strikes a stranger more forcibly, if he visits Sweden in June, than the absence of night. At Stockholm, for example, the sun goes down a little before 10 o'clock. P. M.; but he passes around the earth and s only just below the north pole a short time: there is a great brightness all night, and such that you can see to read at midnight.

There is a mountain at the head of the Gulf of Bothnia, where, on the twentyfirst of June, the sun does not go down at all. Travelers go there to see it. steamboat goes up from Stockholm for the purpose of carrying those who are curious to witness the phenomenon. It only occurs one night. The sun goes down to the horizon, you can see the whole face of it, and in five minutes it begins to rise. At the North Cape, latitude seventyfive degrees, the sun does not go down for several weeks. In June it would be about twenty-five degrees above the horizon at midnight. The changes in those high latitudes, from summer to winter, are so great that we can have no conception of them. In the winter the sun disappears in the south and is not seen for six weeks. Then it just shows its face. Afterward it remains ten, fifteen or twenty minutes, and then descends, and finally it makes almost a circle around the heavens.

Animal life accommodates itself to these long days. Birds and animals take their accustomed rest at the usual hours. They go to rest whether the sun goes down or not. The hens take to the trees about 7 o'clock P. M., and sit there until the sun is well up in the morning, and the people get into the habit of late rising too. A Battle with Monkeys.

A correspondent of the Boston Commercial Bulletin gives the following graphic account of a fight with monkeys: A vessel was anchored off Columbo, on goats sells higher than the wool of the southwestern side of the island; on Sunday the men asked permission to take the boat and go on shore, and their request was granted, the captain sending the second mate with them "to look For a wonder they did not care about visiting the town, but preferred a stroll in the woods, which upon this morning appeared to be entirely deserted.

About a quarter of a mile from where they left the boat one of the party spied a very young monkey lying at the foot of a tree. This was too much of a prize for Jack to pass by.

Though warned by the second mate not to disturb the infant protege of Darwin, they seized the little fellow and essayed to bear him off in triumph. Hereupon young Jocko emitted a series of yells that caused the forest in the midst of which they were wandering to re-echo for many rods around. If the sailors thought themselves to be the only undeceived, for scarcely a moment had elapsed since the utterance of the first cry by their little prisoner before every tree swarmed with indignant members of the monkey tribe. They ran along the branches over the heads of the wanton disturbers of their peace, chattering and screaming and only waiting an opportunity to wreak summary vengeance upon the kidnapers.

An order from the officer to "make for the boat" was promptly obeyed. When the monkeys saw their enemy on a full retreat they formed in a solid body and followed hurriedly in their wake. Sticks, stones, and every available missile was hurled furiously at the heads of the flying sailors. In vain did they drop their prize, hoping that it might pacify their enraged pursuers. It was not so; only one dropped out of the ranks, to gather up in its hairy embrace the unoffending object of the fray; while the others rushed on more frantically than

Reaching the boat, they had not time to jump in, but shoved her off from the shore, clinging to the gunwales, and crawling in only when some distance had been placed between them and their implacable foe!

When they had arrived at a safe place to lay they rested on their oars and curiously scanned the infuriated army on the beach. There appeared to be thousands of them, running up and down, in wild confusion, and hurling stones far out into the water in the direction of the boat.

Nor did the sailors get off "scot free, for there was not one among them but what had received some injury at the hands, or rather paws, of this army of monkeys.
