

A JUST RETRIBUTION.

A Wreck's Perils and a Young Girl's Fate—A Plot Which Was Partially Carried Out.

Early on the morning of July 6, 1878, a carriage drove up to the Parker house, in Boston, from which alighted a young and handsome man...

Along a path the two walked, and, stopping before what appeared a gloomy-looking mansion, the man knocked. The door was opened and the two entered and were ushered into an ante-chamber...

Among the many rich planters residing in Havana was an old Spanish gentleman named Angelos Rio. He had two beautiful daughters, Angeli and Isadora.

Moved by sympathy for her sister, Isadora brought Angelique and her husband to the family mansion, where they continued to live in apparent happiness.

Senior Varville, the famed lawyer of Havana, sat one morning in his office, when Isadora, accompanied by her maid Mercedes, entered, and with a winning gleam in her eyes...

The paper having been signed, witnessed and sealed, Isadora, in company with her maid, left the office. The difference between this last will and the former was that in the former she had bequeathed two-thirds of her estate to her sister and the remainder to Davis...

On the night of April 9, 1880, the servants in the Rio mansion were startled by the report of a pistol, and following the direction of the sound, rushed to Isadora's boudoir, where they found their mistress lying dead upon the floor with blood flowing from a wound in the head.

Davis was found in his room apparently asleep, but the whereabouts of Angelique were at the time unknown. The belief that she had met with foul play from the same source began to be entertained by many, while the officers were beginning to suspect her of some complicity in the crime.

In this condition of affairs she entered the room, her hair disheveled and her dress almost torn to shreds. When informed of what had occurred she fell into convulsions and would no sooner return to consciousness than to again relapse into delirium.

The fact was elicited that she had, on the night of the murder quarreled with her sister. This was an important link in the chain of direct evidence, while the circumstantial evidence was equally as important.

Though regaining consciousness, it was only to enter into the delirium of brain fever.

Angelique lay in the hospital ward, her death momentarily expected. Davis, on the other hand, was determined to expedite matters, and applied for administration papers to the property of the murdered Isadora.

"Davis, I have a warrant for your arrest on the charge of murdering Katie Davis and Isadora Rio," said the magistrate. When the judge had finished the charge, Counselor Varville arose and said:

"Your honor, the charges will be fully substantiated. Besides, I will add," he continued, "I drew up the will for the murdered Isadora Rio a few weeks after the one on which this man claims right to the estate."

On the day preceding the occurrence of the facts just narrated, Mercedes, the trusted maid of the dead Isadora, received a letter from Cienfuegos, written by Lopez Soares, the former associate of Davis. It stated that, believing he was about to die from injuries received in a drunken brawl, he wished to state some facts regarding a crime which he partly abetted.

After he and Davis had opened their gambling den he discovered that Davis was accustomed to brutally beat his wife. One evening the three took a sail. Davis, supposing Soares to be asleep, struck his wife insensible to the deck, and in an instant had lifted her body and tossed it into the sea from the stern.

When Davis had succeeded in having himself made one of the executors of the will, he, at the moment, determined to rid himself of both sisters, and he selected Soares to assist him, allotting to him the part of abducting Angelique. When Angelique was attacked on the night of the murder she resisted so desperately that her assailant, fearing detection, abandoned his job and fled to Cienfuegos.

At the trial the evidence would be such as to convict her, and as a consequence he would fall into possession of the property belonging to the Rio family, and well be succeeded. With such facts as these in evidence, Davis' trial a few months ago was of short duration, and upon a verdict of guilty being rendered, he was sentenced for life to the quiksilver mines of Alameda, in Spain.

Warm and Hot Springs. The springs called thermal springs are found in all latitudes, at various elevations above the sea, and in most of the geological formations.

The springs called thermal springs are found in all latitudes, at various elevations above the sea, and in most of the geological formations. The word thermal does not, however, denote a spring of any particular degree of temperature, and is far from signifying that the springs to which it is applied are all equally warm.

On the night of April 9, 1880, the servants in the Rio mansion were startled by the report of a pistol, and following the direction of the sound, rushed to Isadora's boudoir, where they found their mistress lying dead upon the floor with blood flowing from a wound in the head.

Davis was found in his room apparently asleep, but the whereabouts of Angelique were at the time unknown. The belief that she had met with foul play from the same source began to be entertained by many, while the officers were beginning to suspect her of some complicity in the crime.
