

THE SWINDLING TICKET SYSTEM.

The inhabitants of San Francisco, as we learn from our last California advices, are seriously determined to put down the system of swindling tickets, which, although it has been in vogue in that city since the year 1848, is now so generally and so extensively used, that it has become a national nuisance.

A stranger arrives at New York, with the intention of proceeding thence to California. He is a man of some means, and is well known in the city. He is accompanied by a young man, who is a stranger to him.

Now, it is universally admitted that a Territory, in becoming a State, has complete control of the institution, and that it is the duty of all others to conform to the laws of the Territory.

That, in the case of Kansas and Nebraska, Congress has consented to the exercise of this function, it is plain from the history of those Territories, and from the fact that they have since become States.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

Letter from "Occasional." (Correspondent of the Press.) (The city, says "Occasional," is a beautiful city, and the weather for the last few days has been charming beyond description, and it is a pity that the season is so short.)

Arrangements are being made in all quarters by those who are taking part in a meeting to be held at the National Hotel, on Monday next, the 13th inst.

It is a pity that the season is so short. The weather for the last few days has been charming beyond description, and it is a pity that the season is so short.
