A LIVELY Paris correspondent gives an account the domestic life of Madame George Sand, at her of the domestic life of Magame George Laug, at not chattau called "Nohant," which stands on the banks of the Indre, and is elegant and comfortable—richly supplied with treasures of art. The Chatelaine possesses a fine boat called the Mayeux, and able—richly supplied with treasures of art. The Chatelaine possesses a fine boat called the Mayener, in which she often treats her guests to a sail on the river, herself managing the skiff with the dexterity of an experienced sailor. The Madame rises regularly at 1 o'clock P. M., breakfasts upon a cup of coffee, without milk or sugar, and cats nothing. After drinking her coffee, she immediately descends to the garden and sets briskly to work, planting, sodding, weeding, &c. She is passionately fond of flowers and possesses many very rare floral treasures. She has a pet American deer, called "Marquie," which is scarcely ever out of her sight. To complete her menagerie, Madame Sand keeps a number of small tortoises, one of which is usually to be seen crawling upon her desk. The charge of smalting so often brought against Madame Sand is perfectly true. She is no sooner up than she lights a digarette, and she continues to smoke for hours perfectly true. She is no sooner up than she lights a cigarette, and she continues to smoke for hours together. At dinner, which is served up at the chatcan, punctually at six o'clock, the hostess makes her appearance dressed with extreme care, always wearing a profusion of natural flowers, gracefully arranged in her hair. One of her singularities is decking herself with false jewelry—though she has an abundance of real—pretending that one looks as well as the other." Afterward there is music, she herself being an accomplished planist and a talented com-poser as well. At 11 o'clock Madame Sand retires to her study and commences writing, never moving from her desk until 6 o'clock in the morning, when she goes to bed. She writes with wonderful facility and rapidity; her "copy" (which the uninitiated will understand to mean manuscript), is very legible and without erasures or alterations, as she corrects only when a first proof." is placed in her hands. THE NEW UNIFORMS.—We are glad to see that an effort is now being made to clothe the new regiments entirely in blue. This is a most judicious change, as it will obviate hereafter the mistakes which have heretotore occurred by which many good men have been sacrificed by the Union troops. Those who wish the new uniforms should by all means repair to the popular Gift Clothing Emporium of Granville Stokes, No. 609 Chestnut street, where they will effect a great saving in aking their purchases. With each sale a useful and handsome gift is given.

A GREAT BATTLE LOOKED FOR .- A battle is looked for almost hourly between the Federal and rebel forces at Munson's Hill, near Washington. The nost active preparations are afoot, and the fight will, no doubt, be fierce. In the meantime the manufacture of first-class clothing for soldiers is going forward briskly at the military-clothing department of the Brown Stone Diothing Hall of Rockhill & Wilson, Nos. 603 and 605 Chestnut street, above Sixth.
