Every one of them was collected through other houses. As two other houses on the same sirect of undoubted reputability and credit, pur-chased drafts from the same party before or about the same time that I did, I would ask the learned counsellor if they were not equally censurable, by inducing Mr. Riggs to pay the drafts endorsed by them, which may or may not be genuine, as neither Mr. Riggs nor Miss Cunningham was expert enough to select the genuine from the bogus when placed together, without memorandums. As the association was entitled to undoubted credit, and this being the usual way by which the Regent drew the funds from the treasurer, as re-quired, was not I and other brokers perfectly justi-fiable in purchasing these drafts? and was it not proof positive, to all human appearances, that, after they had been paid promptly, as presented, for a space of twelve months or more, they were all right, correct, and genuine? I will also inform you, that the consideration given for the drafts was, in a very great measure, bankable funds and silver coin of the United States, less the usual rate of exchange and collection. The rebels were soon repulsed, and General Kelly after them at "double quick." The only stand the rebels made was near the Indian Mound Cemetery and in the town. The enemy threw shell, but could do no damage. Our troops then made an entire ruen at them with such vociferous yells, passing under their fire, that they gave way. The rebel infantry now fled towards Winchester and the cavalry to-wards Springfield, but were checked at the wire suppension bridge by a detachment of Union troops detailed from Camberland. CAT WE TOW ATLOUTION

The Intelligencer, of the same date, says: We learn from military gentlemen who were en-engaged in the fight at Ronney, on Saturday, and who came up last evening, that Gen. Kelly had twenty-five hundred men, two Ohio regiments, six companies of the Seventh Virginia, one company of the third, two entalty companies, and three pieces of artillery. He met the enemy's outposts six miles this side of Ronney, and forced them back upon the town. The fighting was nearly all done with the artillery, on both sides. The enemy is supposed to have numbered about one thousand. They had a rifled common, which they worked well, but they only succeeded in killing one of our men and wounding five. The rebel loss was much greater in killed and wounded. They are supposed to have hanking house of Riggs & Co., and, as is usual with all hanking-houses; monthly statements are for-warded to each depositor, and I doubt if the asso-G. T.
