wood of the main building, known as Union Avenue, not being reached, a number of the people were seen to be looking for the cause, and perhaps more, but he had suffered. He had been excited, reviled, impoverished. His home had been seized and his children sent forth to wander. No blamings could be laid upon him, no fears intimidated him, and so a grateful country has taken him from his mountain home and exalted him high among her sons. As a matter of justice, as well as policy, the Convention could have done no nobler thing than nominate ANSELM JONSON, of Tennessee.

We shall support those nominations and the platform whose principles they represent. There is not a radical man who can decline to sustain and accept the doctrine of these resolutions. There is not a good man who can hesitate to vote for LINCOLN and JONSON. This is our duty now, and by beginning early and working with dispatch and energy, can make the victory in the autumn the greatest we have ever known in the history of constitutional liberty.

The Fair will be duly reopened this morning at ten o'clock, sufficient time having been allowed the employees there who are engaged in the preparation of the fair to get their work done. It is expected that the fair will be a success, and that the people will be well satisfied with the result.
