

LEAF OF EXTRAORDINARY SUFFERING, WANT AND DEATH.

Frederickburg, Va. News narrates following extraordinary incidents in the life of a man named Watson, who some fifty years ago, left Alexandria, settled in George county as a merchant, married a respectable young lady, by whom he had four children, and subsequently became a widower and a bankrupt.

With his little children, two of whom he had, he lived on a small farm which he had, three miles below the line rating Stafford and King George. During the coldest of the winter in the latter part of the year last, his children were seized with whooping cough, and every one of them died.

At the time the father and children were in the room lay the father and children, perishing. Whilst thus confined, his wife broke in his meat and fowl house, stole every fowl and piece of meat on farm. In doing so they passed through garden, leveling the fence, and thereby nitting the cattle and hogs to destroy all vegetables intended for winter use.

A poor widow in the neighborhood sent a small piece of meat, and the oldest, not quite so ill as the rest, did, as long as strength would enable him, crawl to fire-place, stir up the dying embers, half a piece bread, fry a piece of meat, and a coffee without milk or sugar, attempt to give the hunger of his dying father and his. On one occasion, weak and feeble as he was, he staggered through the snow to a neighbor's house to procure fire.

At the time the father and children were in the room lay the father and children, perishing. Whilst thus confined, his wife broke in his meat and fowl house, stole every fowl and piece of meat on farm. In doing so they passed through garden, leveling the fence, and thereby nitting the cattle and hogs to destroy all vegetables intended for winter use.

Correspondence of the N. Y. Tribune.

WASHINGTON, April 16. Kossuth visited Mt. Vernon to day. No man, of whatever country, who honors true greatness, can visit the home of Washington without reverent emotion, without earnest reflection upon the calm majesty, dignified justness and moral force of that character which swayed the destinies of America in the stormy time of our Revolution.

The party consisted of Kossuth and his wife, F. Polzky, F. Hajnik, and Captain Greenoek, of Kossuth's suite; Senator Seward and wife; Elwood Fisher of The South-era Press; Rev. Mr. Bellows, of New York, and wife; Grace Greenwood, and Miss Ann Phillips, of Lynn, Mass. The boat left the Washington wharf at ten o'clock. Kossuth and party embarked at Alexandria, whether they had gone in carriages. The weather was fair, the sky unclouded, the crowd on the boat not large, and the passengers congratulated themselves upon the circumstances favoring their pilgrimage.

The boat stopped for twenty minutes at Fort Washington. Kossuth and party visited the Fort, and by the Commander were afforded every opportunity for observation. Kossuth went into the soldiers' quarters, and examined minutely the accommodations and the accommodations of the soldiers.

Arrived at Mt. Vernon, accompanied by Senator Seward, Mr. Polzky, Mr. Hajnik, Grace Greenwood, and others of the ladies, Kossuth and his wife proceeded to the tomb. Kossuth stood for a few moments apparently unmoved, to those who were near him, but those who were near him felt that he struggled to suppress emotion. In a few moments he grasped the iron railing, rested his face upon his hands, and wept—his whole frame throbbing with emotion. It was emotion which should have been unobserved, but which was too intense for even Kossuth's will to control. It was not a moment, as I consider honest human nature, for thought, the heart, has the mastery in such moments—the affections control—thought comes afterward.

Kossuth had aimed as Washington aimed—he renewed Washington's example—he fell—his country his bleeding—an exile he stood bleeding—ah exile he stood at Washington's tomb—was it any wonder his frame throbbed with emotion—that he wept, and that his countrymen wept with him, as did Polzky and Hajnik? He turned away and walked alone from the tomb—it was an hour for solitude—what were his thoughts? Would not speculate; but afterward, in Washington's library, to some friends he said:

"How much of greatness depends on success! Had we the aid Washington had—no, not so much, I would not ask it—I could not expect it one quarter."

Grace Greenwood said, "Washington's God is your God." Kossuth replied, "Yes, we can rely only on our God, the justness of our cause, iron will, honest hearts, and good swords."

On the return of the boat to the Capitol it touched at Alexandria.

A small crowd had assembled on the wharf. When the steamer left the wharf, three cheers were given by the crowd for Kossuth. He bowed to the people at each cheer. At 3 1/2 the boat reached the Washington wharf. Kossuth went with Senator Seward to his mansion, where he spent a part of the evening.

Thus ended the visit to Mount Vernon. I have tried plainly to tell your readers what happened during this visit. It is a theme upon which one "in the vein" might write eloquently but I am not that one. I have only to add that I have witnessed two affecting scenes connected with Kossuth's tour through the United States, which are to me rich remembrances—so rich that memory will always cherish them—his parting with Ulysses on the Mississippi River, and his deep emotion as he stood with uncovered head before the tomb of Washington—grasped the iron railing, and bowed himself to hide his burning tears—no will I ever forget the sad yet resolute expression of his brow when in Washington's library he said:

"We can only rely on our God, the justness of our cause, iron will, honest hearts, and good swords." May that reliance be rewarded when the crisis for Hungary comes, and may that crisis come soon! W. T. C.

SOME years ago a Philadelphia merchant sent a cargo of goods to Constantinople. After the supercargo saw the sales and boxes safely landed, he inquired where they could be stored. Leave them here, it would rain to-night," was the reply. "But I dare not leave them thus exposed; some of the goods may be stolen, said the supercargo. The Mahomedan merchant burst into a loud laugh as he replied, "Don't be alarmed there ain't a Christian within fifty miles of here!"

HOPLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS.—These celebrated Bitters, prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, 129 Arch street, Philadelphia, are performing astonishing cures throughout the whole country. We can bear witness to their curative powers in the case of a friend of ours who had the Liver Complain, and who had tried almost every other medicine, but without effect. After taking a few bottles of these Bitters he was entirely cured.
