POETRY NO FICTION.

Messieurs Editors : it is more than eighty years ago that Darwin wrote :

"Soon shall thy power, unconquered Steam Drag the swift barge and drive the rapid car."

Joel Barlow wrote his epic poem of the "Vision of Columbus" seventy years ago .--In the Paris edition, Book IX. from page 258 to 263, he portrays "The future progress of society with respect to commerce, discoveries, and the opening of canals." From it I make the following extracts. The Eric, Ohio and Illinois canals are forefold :

"Now round the yielding canopy of shade, Again the Guide his heav'nly power display'd.

Far as the angelic Power could lift the eye. Or earth or ocean bend the yielding sky.

Around the chief in fair expansion rise, And earth's whole circuit bounds the level'd skies

The Hero look'd : beneath his wond'ring eyes Bright streams lengthen round the seas and skies ;

The countless nations open all their stores, The sails, in mingling mazes sweep the air, And commerce triumphs o'er the rage of war.11

"In distant glory, where the watery way Spreads the blue borders of lescending day, Unfolding flags from every current sweep, Pride of the world and daughters of the deep. From arctic heavins, and deep in southern

Where frost recedes as blooms of culture rise-

Where eastern Amur's length'ning current glides, Where California breaks the billowy tides,

Peruvian streams their golden margins boas And spreading Chili leads the channel'd coast,

The pinions swell; till all the cloud-like train,

From pole to pole, o'ershades the whitening main.

He saw, as widely spread the unchannelled

plain, Where inland realms for ages bloomed in vain,

Canals long winding, ope a weary fligh', Ans distant streams, and seas, and lakes unite, Where Darien's hills o'erlook the gulphy tide, By human art the ridgy banks divide ; Ascending sails the opening pass pursue, And waft the sparkling treasures of Peru. Janeiro's stream from Plata winds its way, Madeira greets the waves of Paragnay, From rich Albania, tower'd the falling sun,

SILVER TEA SPOONS, per half do-Back thro' the midland numerous channels zen, GOLD PENS, Silver Holders, run, Meet the far lakes, their beauteous town

And Hudson join to broad Ohio's wave.

From dim Superior, whose unfathomed sea Drinks the mild sunbeams of the setting
