Old Ballion retorts in the following vigorously characteristic style upon certain bazardous assertions of Mr. Senator Pettit, made lately at Lafayette, Indiana. The letter is addressed to Mr. Howe, of the Layfayette American:-

WASHINGTON, Saturday, June 17, 1854. JAMES Howe, Esq., Lafayette, Ind .- Sir: Your letter has just been received, informing me that Mr. Petit, in a public speech in your town, stated that I was the first man to break the Missouri Compromise—that I had a law passed by Congress, annexing to the State a large territory, &c. Sir, your Sonator is a great liar and a dirty dog, falsifying history for a criminal purpose. The Missouri Compromise line was not violated in annexing the Platte country. Both parties to the Compromise agreed to it, the free States being unanimous. There was not even yeas and nays upon it. The General Assembly of Missouri requested it. We applied to the members, personally and individually, for their consent, which they gave; and without their consent no movement was made, or would have been made. The journals prove this. There is a full account of it in my "Thirty Years' View," town, stated that I was the first man to break full account of it in my "Thirty Years' View." in the chapter headed "Extension of the Missouri boundary"—also, in my late Nebraska speech it is briefly alluded to, and this is probably all that the dirty dog knew about it, and which he falsified to answer his criminal purposes. I send you some of my Nebraska speech it is end you some of my Nebraska speech it is briefly alluded to, and this is probably all that the dirty dog knew about it, and which he falsified to answer his criminal purposes. Mr. Pettit must feel chapter in the "Thirty years," and see that time, and I am still. Mr. Pettit must feel that his cause is villianous when he can thus stand up before his constituents to falsely publish history, and to justify his own violation of the Missouri compromise, by telling a lie ppon me.
