WINTER.

VELATED TRON THE "SONGA OF PERANGER," BY C. D. G.

Our feather'd sun mer-choir has fled ! Grim Winter, with his tey chield, Spread over city, wood and field, Hath driven them afar in dread. The Greybeard o'er my window pane T aces in frost, his elfin flowers; And my poor spaniel shivering, cowers From his cold gripe, and howls with pair, Let's wait no longer ! light the fire ! Heap the shundant fagots higher, And warm our hearts to mirth again

The shadows lengthen and the night Drives her black charlot o'er the snows ; But Love protects us, dearest Rose ! We care not for the Day God's flight! Lo! here come a joyous twain ! A faithful friend with his fair bride This evening's gayety divide, And share our hearth, and join our strain. Such pleasure laughs at Front, I trow, And adds unto our fireside's glow, While our hearts warm to mirth again !

Anon, beneath the shaded light Is a read the evening's repast ! This kiss then, Rose, must be the last Ere we of Bacchus crown the rite ! Our friend, at table now, relates The story of a brigand Chief; Then I rehearse-beyond belief-Hobgoblin tales, of olden dates ; While flames in spectral columns roll From the red punch within the bowl, And thus our mirth still scintiliates !

Grim Winter! in thy fotters strong Chain as thou wilt the bloom of Earth, Thou cans't not chill our hearty minth, Nor freeze our genial tide of song ! Our spirits round our hearth create A kingdom from whose azure skies The Summer sunshine never dies. While Love is sovereign of the State ! So, with closed doors, our fire still burns Until the Rose's reign returns. And still onr mirth doth scintillate!
