INTEGRITY TO PUBLIC MEN.

Every observer of the characteristics of the present unhappy contest must have been struck with the unusual acerbity and bitterness with which public men are assailed, by those professing the name of journalism.

An especial mark for the shafts of envy and detraction has been the Secretary of War, who is charged with the duty of superintending the military operations of the Government.

Some of these charges are made in ignorance of the nature and extent of the duties devolved by the war on this distinguished public functionary. He is not a man of affairs, and he is not a politician.

Since he came into office the army has swollen to more than half a million of men! A new organization, with new rules and regulations for its government, has been successfully adopted.

The capacity that organized and administered the War Department in such a manner as to enable it to provide, in the face of the pressing exigencies following each other in such rapid succession, during the last eight months, cannot be other than of the highest order.

It is true that Secretary Chase bore a full share of the responsibility, and has been largely instrumental in developing the financial resources of the country, and providing for the emergency cast upon the nation by the treason of Jefferson Davis and his co-conspirators.

The chroniclers of the future, when they come to speak of the treason of Cobb, Floyd, Thompson and Toombs, and the aid and comfort they received at the hands of James Buchanan, through either direct or indirect aid, or both, and the destitute condition of the North in troops, munitions and arms.

But his true allegiance that his administration of the Department was characterized by overwhelming extravagance, improvidence, favoritism, and, particularly in awarding contracts, none of these charges, involving criminality, have ever been established.

On the contrary, wherever they have been proved, the charges have been traced to disreputable bidders, foreign and domestic, who have been wholly deceived.

We have seen that when the administration of the War Department was committed to his hands, treason was already introduced in its stronghold, had organized a large military force in advance, and was ready to march away from the South where the conflict was to begin, and had stripped the North and West of arms and munitions, whilst it had stored the forts and garrisons of the South with every kind of military stores and warlike materials.

To meet the preparations of the rebel agents, the Federal Government was virtually without an army, navy or military stores. Scarcely eight hundred regular troops could be got together to save the city of Washington from a coup d'etat, on the part of the Confederate traitors.

The laws made for that country at peace were ill adapted to a state of war, and the machinery of the various Departments of the Government long accustomed to run in the same track, had become fixed and almost inflexible.

There was such a state of things, that it was under such circumstances that Gen. Cameron was called on to organize, equip and place an army in the field ten times greater than had ever been called to arms before.

There were no magazines or provisions; the great armories and depots from which temporary supplies might have been drawn were either in the immediate possession of the enemy, or with his easy reach.

The affair of the Rebel steamer Nashville, and the ship Harvey Birch, which we received some particulars per last steamer, created considerable sensation in England. The details of the affair are thus given by the Southampton correspondent of the London Times:—

About eight o'clock last Tuesday morning, (19th Oct.), when in latitude 49 deg. 6 min. North, longitude 52 deg. 52 min. West the Nashville fell in with the American ship Harvey Birch, bound from Havre to New York, in ballast, with the American flag flying. She ran alongside of her, and, as was stated to us, opened her ports and ordered the ship to heave to, the flag to be lowered, and the captain to come on board immediately.

This was done, and Captain Nelson soon returned to his ship with orders from the captain of the Nashville for all the crew to get their things ready as soon as possible, and go on board the Nashville, as they intended to destroy the Harvey Birch. They were allowed an hour or an hour and a half for this purpose, and got part of their things on board the Nashville.

The men from the steamer took charge of the provisions, with the ship's chronometer, barometer and some of the charts, permitting Captain Nelson to retain his own chronometer, but he has £1200 or £1400 worth of personal effects, books, charts, &c.

They then set fire to the ship fore and aft, and in a few minutes the vessel was in flames from stem to stern. The three masts were seen to go over the side, and the hull was still burning when the steamer left her. The Harvey Birch was a fine full rigged ship, of 1487 tons American measurement, and cost about $125,000 in her construction.

She had a total of twenty-nine souls on board, including Mr. Bideyberg (a son of her owner), who was a passenger, Captain Nelson, two mates, two boatstaves, cook, steward, carpenter, and twenty seamen. The men were put in irons on board the steamer, with the exception of the captain and mate, who were kept in the custody of the British vessel for the purpose of being taken to England, but Captain Nelson took the vessel immediately landed in the docks, and set at liberty, with all the personal effects belonging to them. It is stated that before they were put in irons the Confederate oath was administered to them, and they refused to take it, but Captain Nelson took the vessel not aware of the fact although it may be correct.

On leaving the Nashville, Captain Pegarm told Captain Nelson that he hoped they would not part but friends, for what had been done was simple act of retaliation on the Northern States, and that he had no objection to burning their houses, if treating their women and stealing their negroes, and they were bound to retaliate on the property of the North in every way they could.

A NEW TEST—Mr. Wm. H. Richardson has invented a very beautiful and complete tent, which approaches nearer to furnishing the comforts and conveniences of a house than anything we have seen. It is made somewhat after the style of the Government tent, (the Sibley), but has greater capacity and head room. Just overhead is a large canvas sheet, which is attached to the poles by a very ingenious contrivance, which readily expands into a table of five feet diameter, although when closed it occupies about as many inches. Against the wall of the tent are shelves for books, lanterns, &c. A curious contrivance on the top of the tent enables the occupant to change the air instantly at his discretion. Ventilation is further increased by windows, which answer for look outs. A very neat and compact cot, which is adapted also for a table or shelf, furnishes a comfortable and convenient couch. The plan of heating is new and curious. The tent which supports the tent is a hollow tube, and answers admirably for a chimney to the small wood stove at its foot. The base of the tent is fifteen feet in diameter and it will accommodate from sixteen to twenty men, although it has been prepared expressly for officers. It may be pitched or laid down in ten minutes, occupies less space than the Sibley, and weighs only thirty-five pounds. It is water-proof and mildew-proof, and would be a most acceptable present. The plan could be extended to provide large tents for sutlers' stores, churches, &c.

A REBEL GENERAL DEAD—A letter from Port Royal announces the death of General Graydon, who had command of the rebel forces at Port Royal. It is said he was wounded in the arm, and died on the retreat. He was a man of great wealth and large military experience.

Kentucky has now thirty full regiments of loyal troops in the field, ready to fight, besides a good many fractions of regiments forming.
