BOSTON, May 22, 1868. This city of notions, centre of literature and hub of the universe, as it is sometimes designated, is not calculated to make the most favorable impression during the rainy public man in the Union is so universally scason, or the wet and disagrecable weather, which we have had during the entire month of May. One of the great advantages of New York is the fact of its easy access, by land and water, to all parts of the world, by steamships and by railways. The travel and trade between New York and Boston is tious and aspiring. And who has a better immense, and no less than five or six daily lines of the finest steamers in the world are running on Long Island Sound, carrying the poor printer's boy has become an emipassengers and freight to Boston and other Eastern parts, as well as intermediate cities on the Sound. The Bristol and the Fall River lines make what is called the outside passage, which, when the weather is rough, will give one a taste of sea-sickness, espe cially as you approach Point Judith.

The Bristol line, within the last year, have put on new steamers, which, in point of elegance and comfort, are not surpassed in the world, certainly not in the lavish expenditure of money. I took passage in one | Though nominally and legally acquitted, he of these, the "Providence," at New York, at nevertheless stands convicted in the eyes of 5 P. M., and arrived at Bristol at 3 A. M., the people, notwithstanding his nominal took the train at 4.30 and arrived in Boston | acquittal, by the purchase of four Senators, at 6 o'clock in the morning. The engine of which even then, gave him but 19 out of the this splendid steamer is rated at 2,800 horse 54 votes. The investigation of these facts, power with 110 inch cylinder, and cost about thus far, has satisfied every reasonable mind $200,000. The entire cost of the two ves- that bribery and corruption saved Andrew sels, the Providence and the Bristol, with Johnson from being deposed from his high their splendid equipments, was about two office. The testimony of Thurlow Weed and a half millions of dollars. These ships, alone establishes that fact. Mr. Weed is a for such they are, are 375 feet in length and prominent and distinguished politician, and 83 feet in width, or across the beam, and have 240 state rooms, including eight bridal Boston has greatly improved since I last saw it, some ten or twelve years since. In the old city there is scarcely a single straight street, and Washington street, is tho only one of respectable width. But the new or upper part of the city has its regular wide streets and beautiful parks. There is one peculiarity in the structure of most of the private residences that is seldom seen in New York or Philadelphia, which is a semi-circular, or what they call a swelled front. It has, in some measure, the advantages of a bay window, and enables the in' mates to look up and down the streets. One of the great institutions of Boston, of which the citizens are justly proud, is their grand organ, made in Europe. In power and compass it is not exceeded in the world. It is open to visitors and played every Wednesday and Saturday, from 12 to 1 o'clock. Music Hall, which contains the organ, is a capacious building, with lofty ceilings, and will seat nearly three thousand persons. The cost of the organ was fifty thousand dollars in gold. The dimensions of some of the large pipes are such that a man might crawl through, the tones of which resemble distant thunder, and as a Bostonian informed me, could be more readily felt than heard. To show the varied powers of the instrument, the organist played that beautiful and popular air, the "Last Rose of Summer," in tones that resembled the mellifluous cadences of a lady singing at a distance. In an instant after the organist, seemed to throw his whole force on the various key boards, and like a perfect Jupiter tonans, command ing Eolus to loosen all the winds of heaven, the powers of this grand instrument were developed and put in motion. To those who appreciate the deep, solemn and impressive tones of the organ, the effect was truly grand and sublime.

The Massachusetts legislature being in session I embraced the opportunity to visit the State-House and take a look at the body of lawgivers of this enlightened Commonwealth. Stating to the single door-keeper, seated outside the hall, that I was a Pennsylvanian, and desired to enter, he introduced me to a member just going in, who cordially placed me in a member's vacant cent, as there were apparently but a few other scats provided. From a member at my side I learned that there were only 240 members of the House and 40 in the Senate, Formerly there were about 400, when the galleries were necessarily occupied by members. In the Senate chamber, across the hall there is a small space behind the railing, which affords standing room for about onefourth as many as can be accommodated at Harrisburg. Contrasted with the numerous door keepers, &c., of our own legislature, the Democratic simplicity of this body was most obvious. There are no deaks for members, who sit closely in rows, with small tablets in front for the convenience of writing. But even this is an improvement on their British ancestors. Pitt, Fox and Sheridan had no better facilities than what their laps afforded to take notes, in the House of Commons, sented, as they were, on benches.

The State House is an old, substantial building, lately remodeled and improved they were unanimous in their opinion that no better selection, or a more satisfactory one than Mr. Colfax, could have been made-This opinion is universal, and acknowledged by Republicans and Democrats, everywhere.

NEW YORK, May 26th, 1868. Returning from Boston to New York, I took the Stonington line, passing through Providence, Pawtucket and other thriving manufacturing towns in Rhode Island. The new steamers on this route are trulysplendid, though not so large or half as expensive as their rivals of the Bristol line. The fare on this route is only $3 for about 90 miles travel by railroad, and 120 by steamboat.

New York, though the commercial centre, is not, exactly, the political centre of the Union, so far as the Republicans are con-

Its 40,000 Democratic majority is made up of material that does not add much to the character or prosperity of the country. Outside of the city, where the foreign element is not so large, the Republicans have a large majority. The New York Democracy have been greatly disappointed in the Chicago nominations. They hoped to get up a feud among the Republicans in the nomination of a Vice President. Unfortunately for them, the selection of Colfax for that position has left them nothing to hope for. Perhaps, no popular, or more generally esteemed, for all the qualities that adorn the man and statesman, as Mr. Colfax. Even the New York World, the leading paper of the Democratic party, admits this fact, and the only fault it can find in Mr. Colfax is that he is ambiright to be ambitious? His aspirations were noble and honorable, and by his own efforts, nent Statesman, and is acknowledged by Republicans and Democrats to be one of the ablest speakers that ever presided over Congress. It is a common thing to hear Democrats, everywhere, say that the nomination of Grant and Colfax was decidedly the best which is almost equivalent to an admission of their election. The result of the trial for the Impeachis the intimate friend and counsellor of Secretary Seward, and was a most unwilling witness against President Johnson.

The vote on the second article, relating to the tenure of office act, having resulted like the eleventh, there was no use voting on the remaining articles. Thus ends this famous trial of Impeachment, which some well-meaning people of both parties deplore, that will be a lesson to future Presidents. and restrain them from the exercise of arbitrary power. The resignation of Mr. Stanton is what was expected. He had some-

President was convicted or acquitted. THE WORK OF THE CONVENTION. Though the nomination of Gen. Grant for the Presidency by the party of Union, freedom, and true democracy, has for several months been conceded by all, and though the fiery political ordeal through which the country has lately passed has added to his fame as the first captain of the age, the reputation of possessing a clear judgment and an unbiased fidelity to the will of the people in all political affairs, yet the unanimous, enthusiastic, overwhelming choice of the true and tried Hero-by six hundred and tifty delegates voting on behalf of all the States and Territories of the Union-is a triumph as gratifying to the nation at large as it can be to the General and his immedi ate supporters. It is the universal testimony of the majority of the American people that the principles of Union, Liberty, and true Democracy, which inspire the Republican party, are largely indebted for their victory over the Rebellion and Slavery to the genius and fidelity of Gen. Grant. For all in vain would have been devotion to freedom, or eloquence in its vindication, or sagacity in marshaling its hosts for political conflict, if, when these had culmins prayers and groans of millions ascended to the Unseen Ruler of events that He would bless the nation with a leader of judgment, skill, patriotism, and courage equal to the sponded by raising up Gen, Grant. Under his guiding hand, the decisive battles of sublime task before him, Providence rethe war were fought, upon the issue of which depended whether the Union should survive, whether freedom should be extended to all classes of men, and ultimately whether universal suffrage and loyal supremacy, the present policies of the Republican party, should prevail throughout the land. With no other man is the triumph of Republicans in principle so closely identified as with ULYSSES S. GRANT. With him as their champion, they went into the struggle which determined whether Liberty or Slavery should rule on this Continent for the next century; and with him they came out-triumphant. His life has been theirs, his triumphs theirs; and it is well that the Republican party, with instinctive gratitude, have made him their champion for the approaching campaign and their choice for President. That same calm judgment, ster-ling sense, accurate estimate of the men whom he selects for executive positions, and, above all, that sensible habit of confin ing bimself to his own duties, leaving to others the performance of theirs, holding all his subordinates fully to their responsi-bility, and leaving all his coordinates in complete independence, even of his advice, and still more of his control-all these qualities, which have shone so clearly in him, and made the all-sufficient promise he character of Gen. Grant, are among the highest qualifications that could be conceiv ed for the Presidential office. The lamentable failures and mischievous crimes of Andrew Johnson have at least taught us that classic in its style of architecture, but is comfortable and substantial, and contains forty-seven rooms in all the departments.

I was in Boston when the news of the nomination of Grant and Colfax was received. While they would have preferred their own fellow citizen, Senator Henry Wilson, they were unanimous in their opinion that will prove as successful in conquering the corruption which now infests every department of the Government, as he has been in subduing the great Rebellion. The executive command of fifty thousand civil office holders will be a more familiar task to the General who has commanded a million. General who has commanded a million of men in the field, than perhaps to any other person ever elevated to the Presidency.

The country will welcome the nomination of Gen. Grant as the harbinger of Peace, of a thorough and righteous reconstruction, and of a prudent and popular administration.

The nomination of Schuyler Colfax for the Vice-Presidency is the most universally satisfactory that could be made. Notwithstanding the desire to avoid taking both our sandidates from the West, or rather from the center-as we must soon come to regard Illinois and Indiana—it was wisely felt that no geographical reasons should weigh against the imperative wisdom of putting forward our two best men, both for availibility before the people and for capacity and integrity in office. Such are Grant and Colfax. It is a noble, glorious, ticket. Since the days of Washington and Adams, we have had none more worthy of the over whelming, unanimous support of the American people without distinction of party.

The platform is fair, temperate and firm. While denouncing all forms of repudiation it consults the interest of the tax-payer by recommending a gradual redemption of the public debt and reduction of the rate of in erest. It sustains reconstruction on the basis of impartial suffrage and loyal supremacy, justifies the impeachment of Andrew Johnson for his high crimes and misdemennors, and guarantees protection to all naturalized citizens.

Against such candidates and principles the treachery of false friends and the hostility of open foes are alike futile. All the States were represented in the Convention. Now let our friends in Congress push on the work of reconstruction-the chief present duty of the Republican party—so that the votes of all the States, if possible, may be cast at the election. Let us have an Administration unanimously elected by all the States, and by so large a majority of the whole people that its adversaries will thank us for omitting to mention them.

The campaign opens gloriously. On with the great work! Let our watchword be GRANT, COLFAX, AND VICTORY!

BUYING AN ACQUITTAL .- Any one accusthat could have been made by the party, tomed to reading the papers will at once genuine Copperhead scheme. It is from the New York World, and is given editoriment of the President surprises no one .- ally under the head "How to secure an Acquittal:"

"Let the men of wealth in this city, with out regard to party, assemble at the Ex-change or in the Cooper Institute and subscribe a sufficient sum, ten millions dollars, if need be, to buy a favorable verdict. There are fourteen Radical Senators, whose terms of office expire in 1869. Beyond that time they are sure of no political position so far as they know now, they are sure of no 'paying place.' Surely as many as eight of these men would far rather be sure of million cash in hand than to wait for the uncertainty of a $5,000 office by and by .-Let us buy their votes at their own price when we consider the commercial pecuniary interests at stake in this city alone, ten millions now is a mere trifle in comparison. Let us buy the verdict which is so vital to the interests of this city."

By no word, or sign, or act, has General Grant sought the nomination for the Presidency. The convention had no alternative It merely recorded the expressed will of the people in formally nominating General but which, I think, has left an impression Grant. The vote of the people will be as emphatic as the vote of the convention was unanimous. It would be a work of supererogation to urge reasons why Gen. Grant should be elected-why the action of the convention was a wise one. The people time since determined to resign as soon as rule. And there are no two opinions among the Impeachment trial was over, whether the the loyal men of the country as to the wis-Indiana, is placed second on the ticket .-From a poor printer, struggling upward always, pure as a man, unimpeachable as a patriot, wise and discreet as a statesman scking in no quality demanded of a man chosen to fill the places in the public service to which he has been successfully elected, it will be found that he will meet the expectations of the people who will elect im Vice President of these United States. He is as true, as faithful, as good, as honest, as clear-headed, and can comprehend the wishes and purposes of the people, and will meet their demands as surely, as any man in the Republic. He has never been found He never will be. He has the wanting. He never will be. He has the hearts of the people to back him, and their hopes to stimulate him. He is incapable of treachery, and beyond the reach of corruption. He is a man of the people and for the people; and the people of this country will vote for him,—Chicago Republican.

[From the Philadelphia Press.] Colfax for Protection.

Last year, on the seventh of May. Hon. Schnyler Colfax, now the Republican nomince for Vice President of the United States delivered in this city, in National Hall, on Market street his famous and graphic speech, "Across the Continent," in behalf of a monumental fund then being raised by some of the most influential and patriotic citizens of Germantown, wdo were about to erect a handsome shaft in honor of the falen heroes who went from that place. Those who heard it will not soon forget the firm faith of the speaker in our grand future, which lifted even his plain relations of fact

There was one point, however, especially pleasing to his Philadelphia audience, which we now recall with fresh and significient interest. Clad in a suit of California home spun wool, the speaker indulged in a glowing and eloquent tribute to native industry, and declared himself, without reserve or qualification, amid rounds of hearty applause, an advocate of protection for home abor and the American laboring man.

We reproduce from THE PRESS of May 1867, an editorial reference made at th time to this event:

It was gratifying last night to hear the Hon. Schuyler Colfax, whose distinguished national position is so familiar to all the country, and whose political influence is so universally acknowledged, commit himself so unreservedly and without qualification to the protection of domestic industry. His statesmanlike position on this great absorbing question of the nation is but the logical sequence of the intense and burning patiotism which every-word of his speechs and every act of his public life reveals. time to this event :

GEN. GRANT and Mr. Colfax were sere naded in Washington, on last Friday evening. Gen. Grant made a speech. He an. nounced that he would not decline to fill the position to which the people have called that his future course should be modeled upon his past. So much has rarely been said in so few words.

How Conviction was Defeated. STUBBORN WITNESS ARRESTED

Washington, May 25.—The House was visited with a sensation to-day, a parallel of which has not been witnessed since the memorable first days of impeachment. memorable first days of impeachment. About two o'clock Mr. Butler appeared on the floor, fresh from the meeting room of the Impeachment Managers, and immediately asked leave to make a privelege report. Members and newspaper correspondents had anticipated what was coming, and when Mr. Butler obtained the floor every one of their number who was around the building soon appeared. No objection was made and the report was handed to the Clerk to read. It began with a resolution setting forth that as a man named Wooley, whom forth that as a man named Wooley, whon the Managers had summoned as a witness, had refused to appear, the House arrest him for contempt, and compel him to appear. In support of this resolution came a preliminary report of the Board of Managers, containing nearly all the evidence they have so far taken in their investigation of the alleged corrupt influence brought to bear on Senators to effect the result of the improperator. The closest attention was impeachment. The closest attention was paid to the reading of the report, and the astounding developments contained therein produced a decided sensation among all present. The Democrats appeared as much astonished as the Republicans. The President has evidently expected that Mr. Butler would make a report, and accordingbe present to hear, to see, and report the effect. They, with Mr. Merrick, of Surratt's counsel, and Scuator Patterson, the President's son-in-law, were on the floor, sitting together on one of the sofas, listening, at-tentively. Senator Trumbull came in during the reading, and wandered around on the Republican side, no one paying any attention to him. He talked awhile with his colleague, Bromwell, and then went to the Democratic side and had a chat with Randall and Ross, closing up with an interview with John Baker, member from the Alton District, Ill. A significant coincidence happened about an hour afterward, when Baker obtained the floor and made a savage attack on Butler and the Board of Managers, because there was no Democrat associated with them, and denounced their report as a partisan affair. There is a great deal being said about the course Mr. Baker has been pursuing lately, and the friends of the party here express the hope that the Republicans of the Twelfth district of Illinois will examine well his record before they enter into the next campaign. Senator Ross came into the House during the reading, and remained untill adjournment. He took a seat on the Democratic side, with Mr. Sitgreaves, of New Jersey. After the reading had been finished, Butler derecognize the following cool thing as a manded the previous question on his resolusumed ten minutes in denouncing the Managers for having found out so much. Mr. Eldridge made a short, whining speech, entering a complaint for the reason that there was no representative of his party on the Board of Managers. Mr. Butler replied by asking Mr. Eldridge whether he was of the party favoring fraud, or of the party opposed to frauds, and taking it for granted that he was of the latter, he was already represented. Mr. John Baker then came to the aid of Mr. Eldridge, and denounced the in-vestigation as a partisan affair, for the reason that there was no representative of the Democracy on the Board of Managers.— Butler replied by asking Mr. Baker if he were appointed by the House to make an investigation. He did not think he could give impartial justice; and if so, did he think or charge that any member of the House would do otherwise? Mr. Butler, completely demolished Mr. Baker, much to his amasement. The resolution was then passed, and soon afterwards the House ad-Members gathered around Mr. Butler, and congratulated him on his success, and discussed the merits of the extraordinary occurrences. The report of the Managers to-day is the subject of conversation everywhere to-night. The suspicions relative to undue influence on the Senate have been strengthened, and it is now seen that the newspaper dispathes on that subject had some foundation in fact, and were not the invention of an imaginative corres-pondent. The general feeling is that of disgust and indignation at the conspirators in this plot to defeat the ends of justice.

The developments so far but sharpen the appetite of the public for more information or the subject, and there appears to be no way of putting an end to the expose except by a full and complete investigation. The Managers are determined to unearth everything, if possible, but the labor is not an easy one, so carefully have the conspirators covered up their tracks. Subpænas have been served on a large number of other members of the Western Whisky Ring, and some of them are expected in town to-morrow. It is generally believed to night, in well informed circles, that the vote will not be taken to-morrow on any of the remaining articles. The Senate held an informa meeting on the subject this evening, and another will be held early to morrow morning, to consider the best course to be pursued under the circumstances. The John-
