IMPEACHED THEMSELVES of supreme folly. [Applause and laughter.] Some two or three weeks ago we were beaten in New Hampshire. The Democracy took great courage. They said it was an evidence of reaction, that the Republican party was dying, and that they were coming into power. The truth was, it was the re-sult of local causes, local dissensions of apathy brought by long success, of the in-difference that results from continued tri-umphs. There was in that defeat no element of degeneracy on the part of the Re-publican party. But we have had another election in Connecticut. You have doubt-less heard of that. [A voice, "Where is Summer ?"] We did not count very much on carrying Connecticut. It was hardly our year to do it. That State has been close for a good while; but the Republicans there determined to show the Democracy that they were reckoning without their host; that the people of the country did not intend to put this Government into the hands of that party that so nearly brought the Republic to ruin. We have TRIUMPHED IN CONNECTICUT, and the elections in other States show that the Republican party, so far from being in a decaying or dying condition, is full of lusty life, and will achieve, a grand victory in 1872. [Loud applause.] Last year we lost Indiana by a small majority. The defeat was the result of local causes, causes growing out of State questions, and was in nowise connected with national politics. But that will not happen again in Indiana. If we had an election to-morrow in Indiana. If we had an election to-morrow in Indiana I believe we should carry it by ten thousand majority. In 1872 the State of Indiana will show that she has not yet forgotten the ser-vices of her soldiers; she has not yet forgotton the glorious dead; she has not for-gotten the principles of her great party, which alone can save the country; she will show that she has not yet forgotten that hero that led our arms to victory. [Cheers.]

My friends, I have spoken to you longer than I intended. There are distinguished persons here to-night whom you will be glad to hear.

THE VICE PRESIDENT, s fellow-citizen and friend of mine from Indians, who long served the State with great distinction in Congress, and who now presides over the Senate of the United States with distinguished ability and success. You will be glad to hear from him, and to hear from other Republicans from Indiana, able and eloquent who have faithfully served their country for years. To my Indiana friends I again return my thanks. To my fellow-citizens of Washington I express my thanks for their presence here to-night.

gine, as your honor resides next to an Episcopalias church, and you are yourself a strict Presbyterian! This witty rejoinder convulsed the entire court with witty laughter, in which all present joined hartly.

---A PLAIN PROPOSITION .- It is natural for man to indulge an appetite that affords him pleasure. So frequently in many cases has this been done, that what at first was innocent, by constant indulgence becomes vice. It has been so with Patrick O'Reardon, and he now puts in an appearance be-for a Justice on the charge of haibtual
