A Word About Raspberries.
It has always been maintained that a good thing was worth taking a little trouble with in order to get it, and so with the finer kinds of raspberries. We have practiced laying down the canes, and thus have been able to raise the delicious Hornet, Orange and other good kinds to perfection. The trouble is very little, and we have got something which we can depend on for giving a good account of itself after it is done. If you have a score of acres to protect, we should not quarrel with him who would regard the ability to take care of itself in winter as one of the first essentials in a good market raspberry.
But we suppose that the past winter has given a death-blow to the reputation of all hardy raspberries. Even the blackcap in the fence-rows have been injured in many instances, and it will not be surprising if such usually hardy ones as Philadelphia and Herdshire suffer this year. This will give a new clew to the planting idea; and who can blame a score of acres to protect, we should not quarrel with him who would regard the ability to take care of itself in winter as one of the first essentials in a good market raspberry.
It is more than likely that the injury to the canes by the winter, will result in short crops, both of the blackberry and raspberry, and that high prices will be the consequence. Of late years there have been so many as to be within the reach of hundreds who hardly knew them by name before, but if our anticipations of a scarce crop are correct, the strawberry will yet remain the poor man's fruit.
In the planting of raspberries there is one hint which may be of service to raspberry planters and that is not to set the plants too deep. More do from this cause than people have any idea of. The raspberry canes should be cut off to about one foot, and not set deeper than an inch above where the roots are. The earth must, of course, be pressed very firm and firm against the sets, when thus planted, or else they will soon dry out. Some use much to shade the ground after the raspberry canes have been planted, but if pressed firmly in the earth they will not suffer from the weather, unless extremely dry, and do much better than with the straw on the surface the first year.—Germania Telegraph.
Pruning at Transplanting.
At this planting season it may not be amiss to observe that most trees will be benefited by a little pruning at the time of planting. In saying this we know it is opposed to the teachings and the practice of some excellent fruit-growers who have succeeded very well in transplanting without using a knife on the tree from the first to the last. But an extended observation shows us that in most cases with people this good result would not follow. If the roots were always in good condition, or were not allowed to get dry before planting, there might be some benefit in the pruning, but it is very rarely the case that this good condition of the roots is secured.
It is sometimes said that the whole mass of wood in the transplanted tree is necessary to furnish the downward sap necessary to form roots; but those who have carefully watched the operation of root-making, have, no doubt, seen that roots are most rapidly formed while the tree is growing most vigorously, and now leaves and branches are forming. To get a good, rapid, new growth, therefore, in a means of getting roots, and this rapid growth is encouraged in a strong degree, by pruning at transplanting.
How much should be cut will depend on the amount of roots already existing and the kind of tree to be planted. An apple tree, for instance, seldom requires much, because the roots are naturally fibrous, and in digging the tree there is always a good preparation of roots to it. The same is true of a dwarf pear, as a general thing; but a standard pear with a few forklike prongs in the place of roots, or an oak with a similar set of horrid projections at the place of various roots, is more likely to require a considerable quantity of the younger twigs being taken off after the young tree is set out.—Germania Telegraph.
CURE FOR ROUP OR GAPE.—A gentleman who had several valuable fowls with roup needed a well-known chicken fancier for a remedy, who was informed that the most effectual cure was to cut off the heads of the fowls as soon as the disease made its appearance. Unwilling to lose valuable fowls without making an effort to save them, he commenced to treat them after a method of his own. He placed his diseased fowls in perfectly dry water, bathed their heads with kerosene oil and rubbed their bills inside with a mixture of alum and grease. He fed them only on Indian meal and baked potatoes well-peppered with cayenne, no hard food whatever being allowed them. With this treatment they commenced to improve, and in from a week to ten days had entirely recovered. The disease has seldom failed to succumb to this treatment. On an average only about one chicken in six died.
SPREAD YOUR MANURE.—The common practice, when hauling manure from the yard to the field, is to deposit it in small heaps of from one to two feet in thickness. In this condition fermentation, to a certain extent, takes place, and a great proportion of the growing elements of plants existing are dissipated in the air. If, over each heap so left, a peck of plaster (gypsum) could be sprinkled, as the heap was deposited, this loss would be saved; but in the absence of this gypsum, to hold the effervescing ammoniacal ether—the ground work of plant life—it is better to distribute it in a row with small pieces of land; for when so spread out no heat or evaporation ensues, and at each and every rain, or dew, the best elements are dissolved and conveyed into the ground.
Recipes.
HOW TO MIX MUSTARD.—Mustard should be mixed with water that has been boiled and allowed to cool; hot water destroys its essential properties, and the raw, cold water might cause it to ferment. Put the mustard in a cup with a small piece of salt, and mix with it, very gradually, sufficiently boiled water to make it drop from a spoon without being watery. Stir and mix well and rub the lumps down with the back of a spoon, as mustard properly mixed should be perfectly creamy, and bottle for use. A teaspoonful of this mixture, mixed with an equal quantity of tepid water, and applied daily with a soft brush, preserves and beautifies the teeth, extricates all tartarous adhesion, arrests decay, induces a healthy action of the gums, and makes them look nearly white.
GOOD WASH FOR THE TEETH.—Dissolve two ounces of borax in three pints of boiling water, and before it is cold, add one tablespoonful of spirits of camphor, and bottle for use. A teaspoonful of this mixture, mixed with an equal quantity of tepid water, and applied daily with a soft brush, preserves and beautifies the teeth, extricates all tartarous adhesion, arrests decay, induces a healthy action of the gums, and makes them look nearly white.
IF A TEASPOONFUL OF genuine ground coffee be thrown into a tumblerful of cold water, while the substance usually used in adulterating coffee will sink under the same circumstances. If when the suspected coffee is thrown upon cold water, part sinks at once, the sample is quite sure to be adulterated.
