on fuesday evening in Lyons' Hall, was another of these pleasant gatherings which the members

well at least thirty-three years ago, whom a very small boy, he took me into the court room at New Berlin, and pointed out to me Mr. Bellas, Mr. Ebenezer Greenough, and Samuel Hephurn, of Milton, who were standing together in consultation. Mr. Bellas' silver hair, extended nostries and two fingers uplifted, in carnest argument, first rivited my gaze, then Mr. Gresnough's abstracted, square gaze at nothing, and then Mr. Hepburn's intent look at the toe of his boot sar, repourling its stitches; were I an artist, I be-dieve I could yet fling upon canvas their linea-ments and apparel, from Mr. Greenoughs' round, baid head, down to Mr. Bellas' shoe-latchies.

On a garret in Lewisburg, where they have remained (for me, I suppose) undisturbed for sixty years, I found a bundle or letters, which will arford me the material for the most I have to say about Mr. Bellas. In June, 1856, the last session, I believe, of the Supreme Court held at Sunbury, Mr. Bellus came into the court room, hearly every lawyer set upon his feet to hand him a chair. Chief-Jurilee Lewis, always equal to the amenitles of any station, suspended the matter in hand with the inquiry, "Has Mr. Bellus any motion to make in this Court?" Mr. Bellus recognizing the old time compliment to the aged members of the Bar with a courtly and professed tow, "I believe, cour honors, I am not cancerned as counsel in this or any other Court," was his roply.

He was the rear-grand of that foreaste band in passing the narrow isthmus between Time and Eternity to the Julgment bar. He died at Sunbury on the 26th of October, 1863, agest eighty-three and a haif years.
