

ABOUT POTATOES.—A sturdy old farmer from a neighboring township dropped into our office recently, as is his custom, to take home his weekly copy of the Village Record, and knowing him to be one of the most successful growers of potatoes in this vicinity, and always the first to deposit a sample of his early varieties upon our agricultural bureau, we invited him to let us know into the secret of his success; and as he did not bind us to secrecy, we propose to let it out for the benefit of our agricultural readers. Accordingly we put three or four questions to our old friend, which we answer, with his replies in the market a week or ten days ahead of your neighbors?

"It is because I take the trouble to encourage them to come early. Every year I watch just those that come into blossom first and set them up by me, and before gathering the crop I take up all I had thus marked, and the tendency of this is to produce earlier ripening from the seed thus selected than from the general crop. Having pursued this system for the last three or four years I think my early crop potatoes are gradually becoming constitutionally earlier in ripening than those produced in the usual way."

"2d. Have you any unusual method of preparing your ground so as to make it productive, as well as tend to early maturity in your potatoes?" "For my very early crop I select every fall about half an acre of my constant ground, plow it deeply and top-dress moderately with manure and let it lie on the ground all winter. Ground thus treated is ready for working in the spring much earlier than if left unplowed during the winter, and I am enabled to plant as soon as the frost is out of the ground. I use a double furrow in the rows—preferring to spread broad cast and plow under. I know not the why or wherefore, but experience has led me to believe that manuring in the row stimulates a larger growth of tops with a tendency to produce numerous small tubers, and I prefer fewer good sized potatoes to a larger number of small ones. This supposed result of manuring in the rows may be all a notion of mine, but the idea is in my head and will be likely to stay there. I always select my most mellow and dry soil for potatoes, as it is labor thrown away to plant them on heavy clay or wet land. A potato cannot grow and increase in size when pressed down by a compact soil, or more than an infant's foot would grow and expand when compressed in a tight leather boot."

"3d. How do you cultivate your potatoes?" "I use the plow, hoe and harrow, as necessity requires. As soon as they peep through the soil I run the drag harrow over them once—followed by the cultivator in a couple of weeks or so, as the tops are three or four inches high. I cultivate just deep enough to keep down weeds and grass, believing it to be injurious to the crop to disturb the roots in the least. As soon as the tops are full grown or show signs of blossoming, I stop the cultivator throw a shallow furrow to each side of every row. This is necessary to protect the Early Rose, Peerless, and other large varieties which have a tendency to push up to the surface from becoming stunted. During the remainder of the season handweeding is the only labor expended on the crops."

"4th. Your potatoes are always dry and mealy. Is this the effect of superior cultivation, or natural to the varieties you grow?" "I attribute it in a great measure to allowing them to become thoroughly ripe, and then take them up before the fall rains set in. There is nearly as much difference between a green and ripe apple. Potatoes require a longer season to mature thoroughly than many of us are aware of, and they should be planted early enough in spring to be ripe in August. When potatoes are solid or soggy, as a general rule it is because they are unripe or have been exposed to soaking rains late in the season. I attribute the well-deserved popularity of Early Rose potatoes to the fact that they ripen early and are gathered and stored away before they become affected by cold September rains."

"5th. Have you ever been troubled with potato rot?" "Very little, and I account for it by early planting, so that my crop ripens in the dry weather of August and escapes the cold fall rains. I gather them when the ground is thoroughly dry, and store them in this condition in a well-ventilated cellar. It is just as important that potatoes get not too warm, as get too cold, when stored in large quantities. In some seasons when the rot has prevailed but in the neighborhood I have dusted all-ditched lime over them, but whether it did any good or not I am unable to say. It did no harm at any rate."

"Supposing ourselves to be pretty well booked up on the 'potato question' by this time, we thought our old friend for his good nature under our inquiries, and invited him to call again, when we would catch him about some of his other crops.—Record."

HOUSEHOLD.

FROM ROASTING A QUARTER OF LAMB.—Paper the roast all over, bake frequently, and cook thoroughly; if underdone, it is not fit to eat; when sufficiently roasted, the gravy which drops from it is entirely free from color; remove the paper half an hour before taking it from the fire; dredge it with flour, and bake it with butter, until it has penetrated the meat; brown nicely. The first basting liquid should be prepared with a little butter, salt, and pepper, season the gravy with a little lemon-juice, and a little lemon-juice; if you prefer, the butter should be replaced neatly, so as not to mar the gravy. It is easier to run a knife in the flesh is several places, making openings, without removing any of the flesh, and dust in pepper, salt, and onion-juice, if relished. Serve with mince-sauce, and potatoes of the quarter, or plain. Asparagus, peas, and gravies, are the vegetables proper for serving with lamb; for relishes use salads. For dessert serve a light pudding, easy of digestion, and fruit.

MUTTON SOUP.—Boil a neck of mutton in a many quarts of water as there are pounds of meat, until the meat drops from the bone. Strain the soup into the pot, if to be served the same day; if not, into a stone or earthen dish. If the meat is wanted in other forms, use half the water, and add any piece of mutton on hand, season the fat, season with salt, pepper, thyme, and parsley. Roll a pint of green peas, mash them fine, and add to the soup. Roll half a teaspoon of butter in flour to make a paste, and ten minutes before dishing add it to the soup. This can be varied, for those who are fond of vegetables in soup, by adding potatoes, turnips, Lima beans, cauliflower, carrots and cabbage. Lima beans can be used instead of peas, but the latter are as firm.

PEAS STEAMED.—Put the peas in a tin pail, or some other article with a tight cover, without water. To every quart put a piece of butter as large as a quarter of a common-sized hen's egg; tender. This is said to be superior to any other mode, as they retain their whole flavor. Peas are generally served when lamb is cooked, if they are to be had; or they are a proper dish with roast beef, or fried meats, and with fowls in any form.

EGG PLANT.—Boil in water until perfectly tender, make a little butter, and beat the plant in it; there must be a little butter, just enough to hold the egg plant together; the cakes should be rather soft, but after the first cake is baked, if not sufficiently seasoned, more can be added; bake on a griddle. This is an excellent method for cooking this vegetable; there is no vegetable as poor as the egg plant when half-cooked.

HARVEY'S EGG PLANT.—Leave on the skin, take out the seeds, fill with butter, prepared as for turkey, sew in the piece taken out, and bake thoroughly cooked.
