BEECHER AND TILTON.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4, 1874. Beecher, Beecher, Beecher. Tilton, Til-Beecher and rather too much of Tilton. None of your senses can escape either

Tilton has been gaining friends every day dore has not kept his hands sufficiently clean in the matter of miscellaneous loveness, no matter how strong his statement. No one who knows the parties doubts Mr. Beecher's guilt, but the people get very judicial in such cases, and insist upon the charges being proved judicially. Now, Mr. Frank Moulton was with Tilton when Tilton charged Beecher with the crime, and it has been stated over and over again that Beecher confessed to adultery with Mrs. Tilton in the presence of Moulton. The great moral, or rather immoral question is, will Moulton swear to this? If so, it settles the entire question and makes a CHILD STEALING. The kidnapping of children, inaugurated in Philadelphia, has broken out in New York, which might have been expected, for I know of no soil in which villainly thrives so well as here. A child of about five years of age was stolen from 35th street, nearly a week ago, and the only clue the parents could get to it was by advertising in the Herald. The answer came promptly-the child had been stolen and was being held for a ransom. In this case, however, the cold-blooded villains made a mistake, for the parents of the child have no means and cannot possibly raise a tenth on, Tilton. We are having a surfeit of part of the sum demanded. The fact that they lived in a good house in a fashionable quarter of the town, and rode in a carriage Beecher or Tilton. As you walk the streets and dressed in purple and fine linen dethe newsboys howl "All about the Beecher ceived the operators. They did not know scandal-l-1!" You look over the dead- that the house was mortgaged, that the walls, and portraits of Beecher and Tilton, carriages were hired, and that the daily in advertisements of sensation papers, stare profits of the head of the house was abyou out of countenance.
