FAST READING TRAIN KILLS JACOB REIGEL

Wagon Demolished and Horse Killed by Queen of Valley Near Hummelstown

Special to The Telegraph
 Hummelstown, Pa., Oct. 1.—Jacob Reigel, about 45 years old, living at Sandy Beach, while returning to his home from Hummelstown last night in a two-horse wagon was struck by the fast Queen of the Valley train on the Philadelphia and Reading railroad at Matlack's crossing at the east end of Hummelstown and instantly killed. One horse was killed, but the other escaped injury. The wagon was completely demolished, part of the wreckage being carried into the station here on the front of the engine.

Mr. Reigel had been in Hummelstown during the day and had purchased two steers to take home for butchering. They were tied behind the wagon, but before going very far they became unruly and would not follow the wagon. Mr. Reigel then employed two men to drive them to his home. After the animals had been placed in the yard Mr. Reigel brought the men to their homes here and again started home in the wagon. He had gone but a short distance when the train struck him. A wife and several children survive.

Dulling Luster of the Wilson Administration

Special to The Telegraph
 Chicago, Ill., Oct. 1.—Roy O. West, an able Republican leader, says events are dulling the luster of the Wilson administration policies to Democracy's hurt. Obviously the watchful waiting policy as to Mexico, which finally has culminated in another insurrection, and that, too, against the man supposed to be specially favored by the administration, cannot have so beautiful an appearance to the public as it has had at times in the past few months. All the prestige that Mr. Wilson gained by that policy seems about to be destroyed by the disturbances that now seem certain in Mexico in the next few weeks.

Then there is a long string of possibilities, some of them now at the point of certainty, growing out of the new policies of the administration and the European war. It will not take long for the people to forget the steady hand that has maintained our neutrality thus far, and in a few weeks will bring changes probably which will render the conflict in Europe an old story. It must be assumed, then, that prestige depending on the attitude of this country toward the belligerents is a very uncertain quality.

Conditions in our own country are the things that will count, this authority believes—a decline in business, unemployment, dissatisfaction of all classes, legislation antagonistic to trade and, latest of all, the pert attitude of Mr. Wilson toward the bankers of the United States. The bankers are a powerful element in this country in the managing of political events, and they have done wonders in the stand they have taken for the protection of our finances in the present emergency. For the administration to make trouble for them is to make trouble for itself.
