TUESDAY, June 7th. 1859. Court assembled at ten o'clock, and Judge M'Candless delivered to the jury empanneled in the case of the M'Cleary family, indicted for counterfeiting United States coin, a brief but able and concise charge, which occupied some twenty minutes. He held that the evidence able and concise charge, which occupied some twenty minutes. He held that the evidence was clear against the elder, that the wife and daughter may have been coerced by him, and that they might safely be acquitted under the laws, which are not strenuous as to females under control of the head of the family. As to the son, although he was of age and had no visible occupation, yet there was apparently not sufficient evidence to convict him. This was, however, a mere expression of opinion by the Court, as the Judge gemarked, and the jury would act according to their understanding of the evidence.

The jury retired, and in half an hour roturned with a verdict of guilty in manner and form as indicted, as to John and James M'Cleary, asserting that his name was Luke, and verifying of the evidence.

The "Joseph Fleming," a new eight-cared barge, built last season, by the Keystone Club, is about to be sold, refitted and painted, and her name changed. She will be called after a well-known citizen.

The "Eclipse" barge, recently sold to a club at Fort Wayne, has been eclipsing all connections. The News is, however, mistaken, in saying that the "Albatross" was built for the Pittsburgh club. Nor have the builders contended themselves with more neatness. Some of the "trappings." (if we may use the term in this connection) are gorgeous. The thwarts are all of mahogany, the backboard is made from the rarest description of that costly wood, and looks remarkably to report proceedings.
